A Dream.

All vesterday I was spinning, Sitting alone in the sun; The dream that I spun was so lengthy, It lasted till day was done.

I heeded not cloud or shadow That flitted over the hill, Or the himming bees or the swallows, Or the trickling of the rill.

I took the thread for my spinning All of blue summer a r. And a flickering ray of sunlight Was weven in here and there.

The shadows grew longer and longer, The evening wind passed by, And the purple splendor of sunset Was flooding the western sky.

But I could not leave my spinning. For so fair my dream had grown, I heeded not, hour by hour, How the silent day had flown.

At last the gray shadows fell round me, And the night came dark and chill, And I rose and ran down the vailey, And left my dream on the hill.

I went up the hill this morning. To the place where my spinning lay; There was nothing but glistening dewdrops Remained of my dream today. - Household Words.

Gen. Washington and his Times. We make the following interesting extracts from Irving's new work, The Life of George Washington. In contrast with General Conway, the Irish adventurer, who signalized himself by a despicable intrigue against the commander-in-chief, Mr. Irving gives a brief notice of A candidate of a different stamp had presented

A candidate of a charge of the part of the process at the military school at Warsaw, and subsequently in France. Disappointed in a love affair with a beautiful lady of rank with whom he had attempted to elope, he had em grated to this country, and came provided with a lotter of introduction from Dr. Franklin to Washington.

"What do you seek here?" inquired the commander-in-chief.

"To fight for American independence."
"What can you do !"

"Try me."
Washington was pleased with the curt, yet comprehensive reply, and with his chivalrous air and spirit, and at once received him into his family as an aid-de-camp. Congress shortly afterward appointed him an engineer, with the rank of colonel. He proved a valuable officer through the Revolution, and won an honorable and lasting name in our country.

Here is the first mention of Hamilton, with some particulars communicated to the author by the late Mrs. Hamilton:

day at headquarters; there was a large party, in which were several ladies. Colonel Alexander Hamilton, who, in the preceding menth of April nad been received into Washington's family as aid-de-camp, presided at the head of the table, and "soquitted himself," writes Grayden, "with an ease, propriety, and vivacity which gave me the most favorable impression of his talents and ac-complishments."

We may here observe that the energy, skill, and intelligence displayed by Hamilton throughout the last year's campaign, whenever his limited command gave him an opportunity of evineing them, had won his entrance to headquarters; where his quick discernment and precocious judgment were on fully appreciated. Strangers were surprised to see a youth, scarcely iwenty years of ago, re-ceived into the implicit confidence, and admitted into the gravest counsels of a man like Washington. While his uncommon talents thus commanded respect, rarely inspired by one of his years, his juvenile appearance and buoyant spirit made him a universal favorite. Harrison, the "old secretary," paternal eye, and regarding his diminutive size and towering spirit, used to call him "the little lion;" while Washington would new and then speak of him by the cheraching appellation of "my

"I noticed," said he, "a youth, a mere stripling, small, slender, almost delicate in frame, marching baside a piece of artil-lery, with a cocked hat pulled down over his eyes, apparently lost in thought, with his hand resting on the cannon, and every now and then patting it as he mused, as if it were a favorite horse, or a pet

LAPATETTE.

During his encampment in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, Washington was repeatedly at that city, making himself acquainted with the military capabilities of the place and its surrounding country, and directing the construction of fortifications on the river. In one of these visits he became acquainted with the young Marquis de Lafayette, who had recently arrived from France, in company with a number of French, Polish, and German The Marquis was not quite twenty years of age, yet had already been married nearly three years to a lady of rank and fortune. Full of the romance of liberty, he had torn himself from his youthful bride, turned his back upon the gayeties and splendors of a court, and in defiance of imped-iments and difficulties multiplied in his path, had made his way to America to join its hazardous

He sent in his letters of recommendation to Mr. Lovell, Chairman of the Committee of For-eign Affairs; and applied the next day at the door of Congress to know his success. Mr. Lovell came forth, and gave him but little encouragement; Congress, in fact, was embarrassed by the foreign applications, many without merit. Lafayette immediately sent in the following note: "After my sacrifices, I have the right to ask two favors; one is to serve at my own ex-

WASHINGTON AND CONGRESS. The following anecdote of the late Gov. Jay, one of our purest and most illustrious statemen, is furnished to us by his son, Judge Jay:
"Shortly before the death of John Adams, I was siting alone with my father, conversing about the American Revolution. Suddenly he remarked. 'Ah, William! the history of that Revolution will never be known. Nobody now alive knows it but John Adams and myself.' Surprised at such a declaration, I asked him to what he referred! He declaration, I asked him to what he referred? He briefly replied, 'The proceedings of the old Congress.' Again I inquired, 'what proceedings!' He snewered, 'Those against Washington; from first to last there was a most bitter party against him.'" As the old Congress always sat with closed doors, the public knew no more of what passed within than what it was deemed expedient to disclose.

Larayette and washingtons.

Lafayette, in his memoirs, describes a review of Washington's army which he witnessed about this time. "Eleven thousand men, but tolerably armed, and still worse clad, presented," he said, "a singular spectacle; in this parti-colored and often maked state, the best dresses were hunting shirts of brown linen. Their factics were equally irregular. They were arranged without regard to was, excepting that the smallest men were the front ranks; with all this, there were record-looking spidlers conducted by zealous offigood-looking soldiers conducted by zealous offi-

"We sught to feel embarraceed," said Washington to him, "in presenting ourselves before an officer just from the French army." "It is to learn and not to instruct, that I came man! after the duties of the day are over, how do you spend your evenings ! When business is dull, and leaves at your disposal many unoccupied hours, what disposition do you make of them ? I have known and now know many young mer, who, if they were devoted to any scientific, or literary, or professional pursuits, the time they spend in games of chance, and lounging in bed, might rise to an eminence. You have all read of the sexton's son, who became a fine astronomer by spending a short time every evening in gazing at the stars, after ringing the bell for nine o'clock. Sir. William Phillips, who at the age of fortyfive had attained the order of knighthood, and the office of High Sheriff of New Eng land, and Governor of Massachusetts, learned to read and write after his 18th year of aship carpenter in Boston. Wm. Gifford, the great editor of the Quarterly, was an apprentice to a shoemaker, and spent his leisure hours in study. And because he had neither pen nor paper, slate nor pencil, he wrought out his problems on smooth leather with a blunt awl. David Rittenhouse, the American astronomer, when a plow Loy, was observed to have covered his plow and fences with figures and calculations. James Ferguson, the great Scotch astronomer, learned to read by himself, and mastered the elements of astronomy while a shepherd's boy in the fields by nights .-And perhaps, it is not too much to say, that if the hours wasted in idle company, in vain conversation at the tavern, were only spent in the pursuit of useful knowledge, the dullest apprentice in any of our shops might become an intelligent member of society, and a fit person for most of civil offices. By such a course the rough covering of many a youth is laid aside; and their ideas instead of being confined to local subjects and technicalities, might range the wild fields of creation; and other stars from among the young men of this city might be added to the list of worthies that are gilding our country with bright
