

Hire a Clerk.

A tall, rough-shod, sharp-visaged, good-natured looking individual arrived in our city a week ago, from the "mountains," and put up at what might be called one of the third-rate houses. The rules were like those at most other establishments of the kind, boarders being taken by the day, week, or month. Jim Polter (we had taken the name from the register) had "gone in" by the week, with the understanding with the landlord that he was to be credited for what he called "lost time" at the usual rate. There was nothing very unusual to this arrangement, though it did not turn out altogether to the landlord's satisfaction. At the end of the second day it occurred to Jim that he had not seen Sacramento for upwards of a year, and, as a thought with him was almost a deed, he, without saying a word to the landlord disappeared. He spent the remainder of the week at Sacramento, and reached his boarding-house here just in time to find the proprietor calculating that Mr. Jim Polter was indebted for one week's board. It took Jim not long to prove that he had been out of town four days, and the bill was cut down accordingly.

"See here old fellow," broke Jim, as the bill was being altered, "if it's all one to you I'll take a squint at them 'ar books.'"

"There's your account, sir," said the landlord, pretending not to notice Jim's last remark. "Two days' board—$2.62."

Jim took the bill, and eyed the puzzled landlord as though he suspected some "shenanigan," he broke out—

"Want to see them 'ar books?'"

The landlord told him he was asking too much—that no outsider was permitted to examine his books.

Jim was now satisfied that all was not exactly right, and resolved to see the end of it.

"Give me pen, ink and paper," said he, "I want to show you how to keep books."

He took the pen, and after having added up various small sums, made out, and handed to the amazed landlord the following account:

Jim Polter to Landlord—Dinner, two days board—$2.62
Landlord to Jim Polter—Dinner, 4 days lost time—$5.25

"That she is!" said Jim as he passed the slip. "I tucked board by the week, you know."

"Ye-s," muttered the half-choked landlord.

"And the bargain was that you was to credit me with lost time at the usual rate, you know?"

"Ye-s."

"Well, I boarded with you two days, you know."

"Ye-s."

"I didn't board with you four days, you know?"

"Ye-s."

"And you owe me for that."

The landlord took a long breath, brushed the perspiration from his face, and casting his eyes vacantly upon the ceiling, slowly ejaculated—

"Oh ye-s."

"Now, I ain't going to be hard on you," said Jim; "you feed well—and as I'm going up country to-morrow, we'll send that little balance for campaign to night. But I'll tell you one thing, landlord," he added, after a pause, "you would make money if you would hire a clerk!"

LITTLE DAM BROOK.—A clergyman seeing a little boy playing in a small stream by the road side, inquired for his father.

"He's over to the little dam brook," exclaimed the lad.

"What!" said the reverend gentleman, shocked at the boy's profanity; "can't you speak without swearing?"

"Well, he's over to the little dam brook, anyhow," persisted the boy, as he went splashing through the water and mud after a butterfly. He's been to the little dam brook all day, and if you don't believe it, you can go up to that house and ask mother."

The clergyman sought an interview with the mother immediately, and complained of the profanity of the child. After telling her, however, what the lad said, she laughingly informed him that "little dam brook" was a title by which the stream was called to distinguish it from "big dam brook," situated but a few miles further to the eastward.

He now felt that he had wronged the boy, and therefore owed him an apology. Hurrying back to the spot he exclaimed:

"Boy, I wronged you in accusing you of swearing; but you should have told me that 'little dam brook' was only the name of a stream, and then I would not have scolded you."

"Well, 'tain't no difference," said the happy youngster, as he held aloft a struggling frog that he had speared with his mother's clothes-stick. "There's a big dam on a big dam brook, and a little dam on little dam brook, and we would have a little dam on this brook, only I spect it's so small it ain't worth a dam."

About 90,000 were destroyed by the cholera in India during the last summer. Excessive rains in India have caused destructive floods, which have swept away whole towns; thousands of the natives perished, and an incalculable amount of property was destroyed. Fears were entertained for Calcutta.

The Great West and Its Manifest Destiny.

The most interesting topic of general interest to readers on the Pacific coast, is the immense emigration Westward, which is rapidly peopling a vast territory, and gradually uniting us by a continued line of improvements to the other States of the Union. The great accession to the population of the United States from abroad, bids fair to even increase; and this, with the disposition of our own people to seek new fields for labor and enterprise, will continue the march of improvement to our very borders. The coming season, it is believed, will bring more emigrants from Europe than any previous year. An exchange says:

"The newspapers of Ireland chronicle the continuance of the exodus from that country, with feelings of sadness and surprise. They had supposed that the improved condition of Ireland; the rise in the wages of labor, and other things, would have put an end to the flight. But the Celtic race still continues to pour into the great packet ships, and cross the waves, and join their kindred in the promised land. Though we hear less of the German movements, yet they are in reality greater, for, as the statistics of the last few years show, the influx of German emigrants is yearly in an increasing ratio over the Irish.—There has been a steady rise in the English emigration, though not as yet to a sufficient extent to have attracted much attention. It is possible, though by no means certain, that in a few years, we shall have a large English emigration to the United States. Our country is exceedingly prosperous at present, and with her wide stretching Western territories open to settlement, she can accommodate all who may come to us."

PHYSICAL ASPECT OF MAN.—We see from an English journal that an examination of twenty thousand infants at the Maternite in Paris gives for the weight of a new born child six and a quarter pounds. At Brussels the same mean value holds good. It is further stated that for about a week after birth, this weight undergoes an actual diminution, owing to the tissue destruction which ensues through the establishment of respiration, and which for a time exceeds the gain from nutrition.—For the same age, the male infant is heavier than the female; but this difference gradually diminishes, and at twelve years their weight is sensibly the same. Three years later, at the period of puberty, the weight is one-half of what it is finally to be when full development is reached.—The maximum weight eventually attained is a little more than twenty times that at birth, this holding good for both sexes; but since the new-born female weighs less than the standard, and the new-born male more; the weight of the adult male is 137 lbs., and of the adult female 121 lbs. The mean weight of a man, irrespective of his period of life, is about 107 lbs.; and of a woman nearly 94 lbs. The mean weight of a human being, without reference to age or sex, is about 99 lbs. M. Quetelet, to whose researches the Maternite is indebted for the above statistics, gives it as his opinion, that communities seem to be under the influence of unchangeable laws as much as individuals. "In communities man commits the same number of murders each year, and does it with the same weapons. We might enumerate, beforehand, how many individuals will imbue their hands in the blood of their kind; how many will forge, how many poison; very nearly as we enumerate, beforehand, how many births and deaths will take place."

AN EMIGRATION AS IS.—The Sacramento Age of yesterday chronicles a curse almost as bitter as that of King Lear upon his two ungrateful daughters. It says:

An individual neat in form and apparel, attempting to cross an alley, slipped from a plank and fell from the roof of the building, and stood propped by both arms which were inserted in the elbow in the soft earthen ware. Slowly straightening himself up, he gazed at his spoiled sleeves, walked to the nearest sidewalk, turned, and looking at the cause of his humiliation, said:—"I hereby curse that plank, the tree it came out of, the soil it grewed on, the outside bark, the inside also, the roots, the limbs and knots, the boughs and the birds that have nested thereon. And I furthermore curse that plank, the man that chopped down the tree it came out of, the saw that sawed it, the man that tended the saw, the water, or steam, as the case may be, which put that saw in motion, and I curse all the surrounding trees, the hills; and I, also, I say that the city authorities of this town, village, burgh or borough, countenance more dirt than is necessary for the health, peace, and prosperity of the community. Besides this, I blame, denounce and abhor that unreliable piece of pine, or whatever other kind of wood it may be—just look at my hands!"

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—There are 152 custom houses and other public buildings of the United States now under construction in various parts of the country. The expenditure within the fiscal year is $9,268,288. The custom house at New Orleans will cost nearly three millions of dollars. It is a magnificent pile of granite, built in a swamp of so little bottom that the building has sunk over sixteen inches since it was built. The custom-house at Cincinnati will cost $320,000, and there are other custom houses still further from any foreign commerce, at Louisville, St. Louis and Dubuque in Iowa, amounting to over $70,000.
