

SCANDAL.—There is a certain period in the life of young people—very young women, in particular—when pardon for saying so-called "the hateful eye" is a transition period, midway between the blissful time when girls are little fairies or wingless seraphs, or something else very beautiful and beautiful, and the flowery threshold of "sweet sixteen."

There is just such an era in the growth of tows—a hateful age—when there are precisely people enough for everybody to know everybody, their little failings and follies; when "who is who" and "what is what" are reduced to a species of science, and people's religion and people's ribbons are summarily disposed of, as often as once a week. With what a had for breakfast, what B wore to church, when C is going to be married; how D is "no better than he should be," and E used to "work out" for a living; who "keeps company" with F, and how much G is in debt, the village is kept in a perpetual boiling, like a cullion of the witches. Character is priced as coolly as Merriam's cotton; and pieces of people's minds are given away on every possible occasion. How like a June hive, the Sowing Circle hums with gossip; what a place for observation is a General; what a godsend is a stranger.—Chicago Journal.

TODLEBEN'S DIARY.—The diary of Gen. Todleben has been presented to the Emperor. Some of its contents are worth quoting. He states, in the first place, that Prince Menschikoff, whose rear guard met the allies outside of Sebastopol, had left only a few battalions in the town, so that had he been pursued and cut off, he must have surrendered; and had the town been attacked, it might easily have been taken, the works of the fortress being quite untenable. Even after the battle of Inkermann, an attack would have been successful, as it was only subsequently and by degrees that Todleben was enabled to throw up the formidable fortress works which he armed with ship's cannon. At the taking of the town, Todleben was not present, being confined to his bed by the wound in his foot, from which he is still suffering. He has been wounded twice besides—once in the neck, and once under the eye, the traces of which are visible. Todleben is a man of the middle stature, with light hair and German physiognomy, and a quick, almost nervous manner, but he is very affable, and his conversation evinces a cultivated mind. He speaks German, French and Russian. His views of the different nationalities engaged in the war are very striking. He praises the English and French as good and courageous soldiers.—With the Piedmontese he never came in contact, but he finds that the French, both in and out of battle, are cheerful and obedient, while the English are gloomy and morose, the prisoners evincing discontent and a hostile and disobedient disposition, which often led to disagreeable scenes.—Of his own soldiers, he asserts they are the most persevering and self-sacrificing—at the batteries they were literally cut to pieces without quitting their posts.

THE DIFFICULTY OF WAITING.—In the course of a political leader, the London Times enunciates the following truisms, though perhaps trite, are worth pondering on:

Of course, it is very hard to wait—No matter whether you have to wait in certainty or in doubt; whether for the fulfillment of a promise or the arrival of a "ship load of money," waiting is tedious, and one feels that patience is a virtue. Young hopefuls cannot wait for dinner, and spoils his appetite and digestion with apples, and bread and butter. Older grown, he cannot wait for his majority, and borrows. Tell people to wait, and they answer that life is all waiting, that they have waited long enough, and waiting makes fools. Yet waiting is the school of moral strength. The grandest achievements have to be waited for. Small minds are always fidgeting and leaving; so when the time comes they are found either stale or empty.

PRINCIPLES OF THE THERMOMETER.—The thermometer is an instrument for determining heat or temperature. The principle of its construction is founded upon the expansion of bodies under the influence of heat, and mercury, as expanding more uniformly under equal increments of heat within the range of atmospheric temperature, is usually employed in their construction. The conditions necessary to a good thermometer are, that the bore of the tube be of equal size throughout, the zero and 32 degrees, or freezing point, accurately determined, and the gradations performed with exactitude. For the purpose of meteorological observations, it is necessary that they be compared with a standard thermometer, that their index errors may be ascertained, and applied at the time of reading. The thermometer most generally used and regarded as standard in this country and England, is that of Fahrenheit, the scale of which is determined by dividing the space between 32 degrees—freezing point of water, and 212 degrees—boiling point of water, into 180 parts, called degrees. By counting these divisions both above and below these points, the scale may be continued at pleasure, for the requirements of extreme temperature.

Mr. Robert Burns, son of the Scotch poet, died at his residence in Dumfries, May 14th, having nearly completed the 71st year of his age. He was nearly 10 years of age when his father died, in 1766. He was an accomplished scholar, had a prodigious memory, and had acquired a great mass of knowledge on a large range of subjects. He possessed considerable poetical talent, and in earlier days he composed verses of considerable merit. His remains would be laid with those of his father in the mausoleum, St. Michael's churchyard.

PLURALITY OF WORLDS.—A writer in the Edinburgh Review, says that the idea of the plurality of worlds has been gradually developed, till men have come to believe that not only the planets, but also the shining stars of the boundless firmament, in all their countless myriads, must be seats both of life and of sentient intelligence, capable of enjoying and employing its faculties and attributes. Modern astronomy has also gone so far beyond the boundary of the star firmament, and there it has described lying in immeasurable distance, faint definite clouds of filmy light, which, even to good telescopes, look, as they float the chasms of darkness like whisks of pale phosphorescent mist. At first these were taken to be the vaporous comets of the remote universe, and they were called "nebulae," by their discoverers. In process of time, however, as the construction of the telescope was rendered more perfect, it was found that some of these light clouds were really clouds of stars.

Habit uniformly and constantly strengthens all our active exertions; whatever we do often, we become more and more apt to do. A snuff taker begins with a pinch of snuff per day, and ends with a pound or two every month. Swearing begins in anger; it ends by mingling itself with ordinary conversation. Such instances are of too common notoriety to need that they be added; but, as I before observed, at the very time that the tendency to do the thing is increasing, the pleasure resulting from it, by the blunted sensibility of the bodily organ, diminished;—and the desire is irresistible, though the gratification is nothing. There is rather an entertaining example of this in Fielding's "Life of Jonathan Wild," in that scene where he is represented as playing at cards with the Count, a professional gambler. "Such," says Mr. Fielding, "was the power of habit over the mind of these illustrious persons, that Mr. Wild could not keep his hands out of the Count's pockets, though he knew they were empty; nor could the Count abstain from palming a card, though he was well aware Mr. Wild had no money to pay him."

TO EVERYTHING BENEATH THE SUN THERE COMES A LAST DAY. Let the sanguine then take warning, and the disheartened take courage; for every joy and every sorrow, to every hope and every fear, there will come a last day; and man ought so to live by foresight, that while he learns in every state to be content, he shall in each be prepared for another, whatever the other may be. If we see an acorn, we expect that it will produce an oak; when we plant a vine, we calculate on gathering grapes; but when we lay a plan for years to come, we may wish, and we can do no more, except pray that it may be accomplished, for we know not what to-morrow may bring forth. All that we do know beforehand of anything is, that to everything beneath the sun there comes a last end.

THE VIRTUE OF GROANING.—A lengthy dissertation has lately been published by a French physician, on the beneficial influence of crying and groaning on the nervous system. It is contended by the author that groaning and crying are the two grand operations by which nature allays anguish—that he has uniformly observed that those patients who give way to their natural feelings more speedily recover from accidents and operations, than those who suppress it; it is unworthy in a man to show symptoms of cowardice as either to groan or cry. He is always pained by the crying and violent roaring of a patient during the time he is undergoing a severe operation, because he is satisfied that he will thereby soothe his nervous system so as to prevent fever, and ensure a favorable termination. He relates the case of a man who, by crying and howling, reduced his pulse from 126 to 60 in the course of two hours. The author also says that restless and hypocondriacal subjects cannot do better than to groan all day and cry all night.

COUNTERBLAST TO TOBACCO.—Mr. Solly, the eminent writer on the brain, says, in a late clinical lecture on that frightful and formidable malady, softening of the brain, "I would caution you, as students, from excess in the use of tobacco and smoking, and I would advise you to disabuse your patients' minds of the idea that it is harmless. I have had a large experience of brain disease, and I am satisfied now that smoking is a most noxious habit. I know of no other cause or agent that tends so much to bring on functional disease, and through this, in the end, to lead to organic diseases of the brain, as excessive use of tobacco."

I do not believe that men are naturally lazy, but laziness is chargeable mainly to a false system of society, which compels them to do what they have no attraction for doing. Remove all aristocracy, every cause that makes labor degrading, and give men an opportunity to follow their true attractions, with an equal share in the blessings of life, and certainly labor would then become a play.

The newspaper editor is sometimes a queer fellow. He often says he is sorry, when he is probably glad; and that he is delighted, when the very reverse is no doubt the truth of the matter.

A queen-bee will lay 200 eggs daily for 50 or 60 days, and the eggs are hatched in three days. A single queen-bee has been stated to produce 100,000 bees in a season.

TO CURE A FELON.—Take equal parts of gum camphor, gum opium, castile soap, and brown sugar; wet to consistency of paste, with spirits turpentine, and apply it. This is said to be a certain cure.

The elastic tissue packed within each hoof of a horse is so folded, backward and forward, that it would present a surface of four feet square were it spread out. Thus his limbs and the entire weight of body rests on spring cushions packed in boxes.

The best idea of weight was given by an Indian, who, when asked how much he weighed replied, "As I am, I weigh one hundred and fifty pounds; but when I am mad I weigh a ton."
