

nized, except so far as manifested by the honorable and just action of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon upon the subject.

It is not pretended that he was without faults. These, however, were rather the result of the circumstances of his life, and were less the offspring of the heart than of the head. Prompt to resent injuries imagined or fancied, his temper was short-lived, and died with the setting sun. Accustomed to govern men and communities during a long life, he did not readily brook control, and perhaps was too careless of the opinions and judgment of those whom he considered as inferior to him.

But his failings are buried with him, and will be no more remembered, while the community that was assisted and blessed by his energetic efforts, and those who knew him, will cherish the memory of his virtues, his lofty and stern integrity, his wide-spread philanthropy, his generous donations in behalf of religion and education, his zeal for moral progress, and his ardent patriotism.

And though we miss here forever his commanding presence, blending the simplicity of the pilgrim with the genial kindness of the patriarch, and the dignity of a king, we would

"No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose),
The bosom of his Father and his God."
