BY G. W. P. CUSTIS.

One afternoon several young gentlemen. visitors at Mount Vernon, were engaged in pitching the bar, one of the athletic sports common in those days, when auddealy the Colonel appeared among us. He requested to be shown the pegs that through it. By means of an axle, cogmarked the bounds of our efforts; then, smiling and without pulling off his cost, tion to a reel, which, in its turn, gives a held out his hand for the missile. "No rotary motion to a cylinder by another set somer," observed the narrator, with em- of cog wheels, and this cylinder is in conphasis, "did the heavy iron par feel the grasp of his mighty hand, than it lost the power of gravitation and whizzed through the air, striking the ground far, very far, with a magazine for holding small shot, beyond our utmost limits. We were indeed amazed, as we stood around, all stripped to the buff, with shirt-sleeves rolled up, and having thought ourselves very olever fellows, while the Colonel on retiring pleasantly observed, 'When you beat a disc, which disc is poised at its centre on a my pitch, young gentlemen, I'll try again."

stature and form of Washington, we give ever a preponderance of shot in the bags not only the result of personal observation may cause it to do so. On one surface is and experience of many years, but informa- painted the points of the mariner's comtion derived from the highest authoritya favorite nephew.

Major Lawrence Lewis asked his uncle what was his height in the prime of life? Hereplied, "In my best days, Lawrence. I stood six feet and two inches in ordinary We know that he measured by a standard precisely six feet when laid out in certaining the force with which the said death. Of his weight we are an evidence, disc inclines, which is done by placing at having heard him say to Crawford, Governor of Canada, in 1799 : "My weight in my best days, sir, never exceeded from disc. A steelyard is used to facilitate this two hundred and ten to twenty." His form was unique, unlike most athletic frames that expand at the shoulders and then gather in at the hips.

The form of Washington deviated from the general rule, since it descended from the shoulders to the hips in perpendicular lines, the breadth of the trunk being nearly as great at one as the other. His limbs were long, large and sinewy; in his lower limbs, he was what is usually called straight-limbed. His joints, feet and hands were large, and could a cast have been made of his right hand, so far did its dimensions exceed nature's model, that it would have been preserved in museums for ages, as the anatomical wonder of the eighteenth century. La Fayette remem-bered this remarkable hand, when, during his triumph in America, he said to us in the portico at Mount Vernon, "It was here in 1784 I was first introduced to you by the good General; it is a long while ago; you were den a very little gentleman, rigged out in eap and feather, and held by one finger of the General's mighty hand. It was all you could do at dat time, my dear

The eyes of the chief were a light grayish blue, deep sunken in their sockets, giving the expression of gravity and thought. Stuart painted those eyes a deeper blue, saying, in a hundred years they will have faded to their right color. His hair was of a hazel brown, and very thin in his latter days. In his movements he preserved in a remarkable degree, and to advantage, the elastic step that he had acquired in service on the frontier.

Being ordered one morning very early into the library at Mount Vernou, a spot that none entered without orders, the weather being warm, we found the chief very much undressed, and while looking at his manly frame, we discovered the center of his chest was indented. This is an exception to the general rule laid down by anatomists, that where the human frame possesses great muscular power the chest should rather be rounded out and protuberant than indented. We were equally urprised to find how thin he was in person, being, with the absence of flesh, literally a man of "thews and sinews." He wore around his neck the miniature portrait of his wife. This he had worn through all the vicissitudes of his eventful career, from the period of his marriage to the "last days at Mount Vernon."

In the appearance of Washington there was nothing of bulkiness, but there was united all that was dignified and graceful, while his air and manner were at once noble and commanding. No one appronched him that did not feel for him as Lord Erskine observed, "a degree of awful reverence." He were a sword with a peculiar grace. The Viscompte de Neuilles said it was because "the man was made for the sword, and not the sword for the La Fayette, not long after the war of the Revolution, wrote a letter to Col. Trumball, urging him to paint an equestrian portrait of the chief as he appeared on the field of Monmouth. The illustrious Frenchman, America's great benefactor said to us; "I was a very young Major-General on that memorable day, and had a great deal to do, but took time, amid the heat and fury of the fight, to gaze upon and admire Washington, as, mounted on a splendid charger covered with foam, he rallied our line with words never to be forgotten. 'Stand fast, my boys, and re- gery disgust them. ceive your enemy; the Southern troops are advancing to support you?" I thought Fayette, "that never have I seen so superb other works of a pious and theological na a man.

67 The London Mechanics' Magazine describes an apparatus of peculiar construction for indicating the course or direction and distance run by a ship. The inventor employs outside the hull of a ship, a fan or screw, placed below the keel which fan or screw revolves with the action of the water, as the ship moves wheel, &c, it communicates a rotary motact with one end of a feeding tube, and has small cavities indented on its circumforence. The apparatus is also furnished communicating with the other end of the feeder. The action of the apparatus is such, that the shot are conveyed by a number of flexible tubes, to a like number of bags, suspended around the circumference of pivot, like the magnetic needle, so that it In giving a graphic description of the can incline or dip in any direction, whenpass, and on it is also placed a small ball, which acts as an indicator, to slinw the points of greatest inclination, which it does by its gravity, the disc having a raised edge to prevent the ball from rolling off --The point thus indicated is the course of the vessel, and the distance is obtained by asthe point exactly opposite the point of inclination, a weight sufficient to balance the

By AN IMPROVEMENT in the machinery for boring artesian wells, the object is attained of releasing the chisel at any moment from the rods, and allowing its free fall to do its work at the bottom of the bore hole. The apparatus consists of a pair of tongs, capable of laying hold of a bar of iron in which the chisel is fixedthese tongs opening and shutting by means of the action of the water in the hole on a disc of leather during the up and down motion of the rods. The operation proceeds as follows: The rods, to the lower end of which the free fall apparatus and chise! attached, ane lifted to the hight requisite for the subsequent fall of the chisel; during this upward motion, the water in the bore hole presses against the upper side of the leather disc by reason of the resistance it meets with by being drawn through the water; but the moment the motion of the rods is attempted to be reversed or lowered, the pressure of the water against this disc is also reversed, causing it to slide a a little way on the rods. This motion of he disc is made to effect the opening of the tongs holding the end of the chise!, which is then disengaged, and free to fall without the rods and free fall apparatus, which then follow at a more moderate rate of descent, and again take hold of the chisel in order to raise it for another blow. The effects accomplished by this free-falling of the chisel are said to be of great impor-

THE CODE NAPOLEON .- The Code Napojeon is in course of translation into Turksh. It is done to assist the Commission appointed by the Sultan to examine and report on the reforms which it is possible to introduce into the laws of the empire.

05 It appears that the New Orlean Custom House, intended for a magnificent sile of granite and marble, is gradually sinking into the swamp. It has declined 16.99 inches since 1851, at which rate of subsidence it will finally disappear from human vision at about the beginning of the 22d century of our era.

07 It is told of General Zachary Tay. lor, that when Major Bliss brought him Santa Anna's despatch, proposing that the American army should surrender without further ceremony, the general, who at that moment was busy writing a private letter on his camp-chest, replied, without so much as looking up from his work, "Tell him to go to h-1!"-a place seldom mention ed except by hard swearers and clergymen, "But," remonstrated the gallant major, "that does not strike me as appropriate language to use in a case of this sort-it's a formal, official despatch, and requires, I suppose, a written answer."-" Tell him to go to h-1!" reiterated the general, calmly. " Put it in proper diplo
