The Oregon Argus

CROOKS CITY

SATURDAY, Sept. 24, 1853.

The Constitution.
The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitutions.
The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.

The Constitution of Oregon is a model which shall surely enable whether they will be the best of all Constitutions, and the laws and principles of justice and mercy in passing through the country, and making them into a state. The people at law, and that the people of the State, are justly entitled to the same as the constitutions of other States. We shall adopt that which we are to be governed by, and for the benefit of the whole people.