Hope.

[From the German of Schiller.] How much the man doth speak and dream About the coming Better Times ; Toward a goal that golden seems He looks, he hastens, and he climbs. The world grows old and groweth young again, But still he hopes a Better Time will reign.

Hope leads him all his life, forsooth ; She flutters round the glocful boy ; Her magic light allures the youth ; With Age she will not buried be. If in the grave man ends his weary race, Hope doth remove him from that resting-place.

She is no wheedling, vain Conceit, Begot in brains of fools forburn ; Within the heart she loudly cries, To something better we are born. And that which inner voices do foretell, Doth not deceive the soul that trusts so well. -Ella Farman.

Housebold Words.

We cannot bid our strength remain, Our cheeks continue round ; We cannot say to an aged back, Stoop not toward the ground.

We cannot bid our dim eyes see Things as bright as ever, Nor tell our friends, though friends from youth, That they'll forsake as never.

But we can say, I never will, False world, be false for thee ; And oh, Sound Trath and Old Regard, Nothing shall part as three.

THE JUST AND TRUE .- One strong thing I find here below; the just thing, the true thing. My friend, if thou had all the artillery of Woolwich trundling at thy back in support of an unjust thing, and infinite bonfires visibly waiting ahead for thee, to blaze centuries long for thy victories on behalf of it, I would advise thee to call halt, fling down thy baton, and say, " In Ged's name, No." Thy "success?" What will thy success amount to? If the thing is unjust, thou hast not succeeded; no, not though bonfires blazed from north to south, and bells rang, and editors wrote leading articles, and the just thing lay trampled out of sight, to all mortal eyes an abolished and annihilated thing. Success? In a few years thou wilt be dead and dark-all cold, eyeless, deaf, no blaze of bonfires, ding dong of bells, or leading articles visi ble or audible, to thee again, to all forever; what kind of success is that !- Thomas Carlyle.

RT We know that man but poorly, whom we have only known when he was living. The best may be said only to begin to live when the grave has closed upon them. I speak not this of their own destiny, but their major influence is given forth only when they have ceased to be. It is the memory of their lives, more than their very lives, which can sink at least into our hearts, or fully exhibit their own. They are like those things which we might not have noticed, if they had not passed by. So, the river rolls on over an arid land. scape, but when its chiefest volume has left the banks, then the vegetation springs up. It is from the past that we gather all our wisdom, and live a thousand years in a day .- Rev. F. W. Shelton.

EF Life to the young is an open book lying on a window-seat in a summer's day. Hope is the gentle wind that flutters the leaves over, and displaces many a page in the thin ledger of time. The reader is dreaming, and heeds not the mischief Hope is playing.

He looks down npon the book again, but the page is a strange one; his thread of thought is untwisted; his train of action broken up; and away he wanders in pursuit of Hope, that avant courrier of the 0.7 In a certain town in this State, a letter arrived for a young lady from her lover, on the day of the election. The postmaster, as is not unfrequent in the rural dis tricts, knowing the engerness with which a message of that tender character would be expected, took upon himself the pleasing duty of delivering it ; but first, like a good Democrat, he must vote, and of course, in a self sealing envelope. This was duly prepared, with the Democratic ticket safely enclosed, and the glaten stuck together. Stopping at the town-meeting, he deposited the letter in the ballot-box, and proceeded with the separate and self sealed to the house of the blooming maiden, to whom he gallantly handed the entire Democratic ticket, State and town .-How the lady interpreted the missive we do not know; but the moderator and clerk ungaliantly refused to count the love-letter, and the Republican candidate was declared elected by one majority. So says the Providence (R. I.) Journal.
