

The Two Angels.
Knewest thou, my heart, the sister-angel pair,
Sent down to earth from holy realms above,
Pasco-giving Friendship, with her lilies fair,
And, crowned with roses, soul-enkindling Love?
Dark-haired is Love, her eye with passion glowing,
Heavenous as spring, quick-bidding on the hill;
Friendship fair-haired, in softer colors showing,
And, like the summer-night, so mild and still.
Love is a stormy sea, upon whose breast
A thousand waves in ceaseless tumult rove;
Friendship a mountain lake, where calmly rest
The clear reflections of the heavens above.
Love smelt quick as lightning's sudden glare,
But Friendship like the moonbeam's glimmering light;
Love to possess and hold will all things dare,
While Friendship offers though she claims no right.
O heart, thrice happy heart! in which forever
The two in friendly intercourse abide,
And where the rose's sweetest flame may never
The lily's soft and mystic beauty hide!
—From the German of Geibel.

LIFE AND DEATH.—"Such," says the great physiologist Bichat, "is the mode of existing of living bodies, that everything surrounding them tends to their destruction." A melancholy thought, but unquestionably true. This life of ours is like a garrison in the midst of a hostile country. However bravely and skillfully defended, it must surrender at last. Its reduction is only a question of time. Commodore Hull, in the act of death, exclaimed, "I strike my flag!" For the first time he had met an enemy greater than himself. Thus all the heroes, "the great men, and mighty men, and chief captains" of the earth, have succumbed, and must succumb. The believer in Christ alone conquers the conqueror. Nay, he is "more than a conqueror," for his "dying daily" is a continual progress toward a higher life, and in the very act of death he "enters into immortality."

GOD UNCHANGEABLE.—There are many Christians, like young sailors, who think the shore and the world land to move, when the ship and they themselves are moved; just so not a few imagine that God moveth, and faileth, and changeth places, because their godly souls are subject to alteration; but the foundation of the Lord abideth sure.—Rutherford.

THE KEY TO HEAVEN.—Sometimes, perhaps thou hearest another Christian pray with much freedom and fluency, whilst thou canst hardly get out a few broken words. Hence thou art ready to accuse thyself, and to admire him; as if the gilding of the key made it open the door the better.—Gurnall.

CUSTARD PUDDING.—Two spoonfuls of flour, six eggs, one pint of cream, a little sugar, one nutmeg. Boil half an hour.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man really is so, but he that thinks himself the wisest is generally the greatest fool.

A rustic friend suggests that type-setting must be a sedentary occupation. A great many stand it though.

A married wretch said that he lately dreamed that he had an angel sleeping by his side, and upon waking up, found it was nobody but his wife!

Mind unemployed is mind unemployed.
