Foreign mails of the last steamer were received at the State Department. Advidisaster to its fall extent. The Northern troops are given more credit for bravery and endurance than our own papers have claimed. Their front heavy works were considered by military men as giving the rebels so great an advantage, as to make it matter of wonder how raw recruits could be induced to assault them under such dread advantages. Our Ministers are confident that no movement to recognize rebels as national will be made so long as our goverament maintains its forces in the rebel States. The feeling on the Continent generally is that the North would be aroused would defer any arrangement with the reb-

The battle of Cross Lanes, near Samerville, [Western Virginia,] on the 26th, proves to have been a bloody affair. Col. Tyler's 7th Ohio were attacked on both breakfasting. Our troops immediately formed in order and fought bravely. They saw little chance of success, as the enemy was too powerful. Companies B, C and I suffered most severely, being in the hottest of the fight. They stood up brively, fighting against fearful olds, and making dreadful daughter in the enemy's ranks.

Our forces scattered after they had cut their way through, but soon formed again. They fixed but received no reply or pursuit by the enemy. The rebel force was 3,000 infentry and 4,000 cavalry, with ten guns Of ours 900 were engaged, 200 of which are missing. The rebel loss is fearful --The enemy's colors and two prisoners were
