

A CAUTION TO MOTHERS.—It is a very common thing to see mothers and servant girls pushing along over the sidewalks the little carriages in which they are giving infants an airing on pleasant days. The practice is a very dangerous one, and is liable to do great and permanent injury to the child. We observe also that carriages are now so constructed that they may be pushed instead of drawn. The position of a child riding backward instead of forward is an unnatural one, and directly affects the brain. Some grown persons even cannot ride backwards in a railroad car without experiencing a sense of faintness, and to expect a child to do what a strong adult cannot, is unreasonable, to say the least. It is believed by medical writers that infants have died from disease produced by being ridden backward.

IRREVOCABLE ACTS.—Yonder lies one who has gone to the silent shore; he realizes now that his acts are irrevocable—he feels what before he had fancied, that time cannot alter them, that eternity cannot change them. Beside the bier stands a weeping friend; and too late he finds that tears cannot efface his acts, that repentance cannot amend them; too late he finds that every act of harshness, every bitter word, every sarcastic expression, lives forever; too late he finds that unseen wings have borne his deeds beyond the flight of love, and that he can never recall them to his embrace again.

The Parthenon is to be restored!—That venerable ruin, which has for so many centuries mocked the petty triumphs of art from its rocky throne on the Acropolis, is to be remanded back to the age of Pericles—in France! The committee delegated to carry out this scheme is to consist of Prince Napoleon, the Duke of Laynes, the Count of Lobard and others. The modern Parthenon—like the ancient—will be built of pure marble.

An INVITATION FROM VENICE.—Sit down, fair Phyllis, on the flowery bank, and while Philomel chants his roundelay, partake with me of this rural banquet I have made for thee."

Thus spake the shepherd Corydon, to her he loved.

And Phyllis sat down among the dewy grass, and then she found the bank wet.

The New Orleans Crescent says there is no truth in the statement that 50,000 stand of arms have been received in that city from Europe.

—Unhappy condition of man—sorelyly does his mind arrive to its maturity, when his body commences its decay.

—Whatever discovery one may have made in the region of self-love, there remains still an unexplored tract beyond.
