

COFFEE AS A MENTAL STIMULANT.—Schiller, during hours of composition, kept at his side a bottle of Champagne or Rhenish wine, or a cup of strong coffee. Horace Walpole wrote usually from 10 to 2 o'clock at night always having strong coffee by him. Sir William Jones drank a great deal of coffee to support him in his nocturnal studies. Baron de Grimm states that Voltaire, a few days prior to his death, with his characteristic activity and enthusiasm, attended the rehearsal of the Academy, and insisted on the production of a new and important edition of their dictionary. To this project many objections were started, which he resolved to obviate in an elaborate discourse. To strengthen himself for the task, he swallowed a prodigious quantity of strong coffee, and continued to work for upwards of twelve hours without intermission. This independent effort brought on an inflammation of the bladder. For the purpose of relieving the pain, he swallowed, with his usual impetuosity, a large quantity of laudanum. The consequence was that he fell into a lethargy from which he never entirely recovered.

SUNDAY SHOES.—Strange that all kinds of leather are too poor to go to church in on a wet Sunday. What is the matter with all our tanners that shoes can not be made which are proof against Sunday mud and wet? Multitudes of people run around all the week in ordinary leather, and no harm comes to them. But if the pavement be the least wet of a Sunday morning, they are certain that they shall get their feet soaking wet, and they might as well order their coffins at once as to go out in such shoes as they have. What is the mystery that makes leather which is so impenetrable all the other days of the week, not much better than brown paper on Sunday morning? Who will make his fortune by providing the vast army of stay-at-homes with a patent improved church-going shoe, warranted water-proof on Sundays?
