OUR FLAG.

[From the Union Songsten.]

Fling abroad its folds to the cooling breeze,
Let it float at the mast-head high;
And gather around, all hearts resolv'd,
To sustain it there or die:
An emblem of peace and hope to the world,
Unstained let it ever be;
And say to the world, where en it wayes,
Our flag is the flag of the free!

That banner proclaims to the list'ning earth,
That the reign of the tyrant is o'er.
The galling chains of despotic sway
Shall enslave us no more:
An emblem of hope to the poor and lost,
O place it where all may see;
And shout with glad voice as you raise it high,
Our flag is the flag of the free!

Then on high, on high let that banner wave,
And lead as the foe to meet,
Let it float in triumph o'er our heads
Or be our winding sheet:
And never, oh never be it furled,
'Till it wave o'er earth and sea;
And all mankind shall sweet the shout,
Our flag is the flag of the free!

BALLOONING OVER THE REBEL CAMP.

The following is an extract from a balloon ascension over the rebel camp, by Prof. La Mounten go over their lines; and so, with the Professor, I paid them a morning visit a few days ago. I cannot say what were the remarks of Jefferson D., Esq., as we floated above his cuampment at Centerville, and I do not know that Mr. Beauregard spilt his coffee on receiving information that the hated Yankees were so near; but I do know that either of the above-named gentlemen, by looking straight up from Center, but I do know that either of the above-named gentlemen, by looking straight up from Center, wille about ten o'clock that morning, could have seen, without a very powerful glass, two inquisitive Yankees taking notes, which in three hours

These remarks, it will be observed, apply with equal force to all persons claiming pre-emption of preference and favor conferred by the Government and by intelligence which we have from the indomitable and favor conferred by the Government but perhaps fortunately for him, he did not succeed in completing the confederate Court at Knoxville, on the confederate Court at Knoxville, being from the east, in the right direction to take us to Manassas; we cut entirely loose from the earth, and went up, up, up, until the Professor's able assistant, Mr. Albert Kendrick, of Troy, with our guard of forty men, were a little cluster of dots, and our barricaded mill a mere hand hand the entire hand and the entire hand and the entire hand all persons taking contracts in the surbreadth square; off to the east lay Washington and the white tent-dotted hills of Maryland; main. veying service in any portion of the public dothen came the Potomae, like a silver ribbon, narrowing north towards Leesburg, and proadening out away to the south and south east; right below us, encampment upon encampment, lay the grand army of the Potomae; the thousands of white tents covering all the hill sides; the black, moving squares and lines, which we knew were our own true soldiers; the brown earth were our own true soldiers; the brown earth which its interpositions may be required to give fortifications upon each commanding eminence, every angle is marked out to our view as though a map was beneath—and the blended, softened, harmonized music of many bands, now swelling out full and clear, as it pulsed up to us, now

Your obedient servant, toned down to the gentlest strains, were sights and sounds never to be forgotten.

But the wind was fast bearing us to the west, that vicinity; with the exception of those scouts, living mass; doubtless their blessings were plentifully showered upon us. But as we were above. as a natural consequence the shower had no effect; and as we had made our call sufficiently long, we threw over a little ballasts bade them take us back again under the protection of our own glorious stars and stripes. I confess that I was a little nervous lest Boreas should not be in an obliging mood, in which case our condition would not be exactly the thing, for we well knew that many thousand angry eyes were watching us below; many a finger was ready, if we came in range, to pull the trigger that would speed a ball towards our hearts—wasn't I excussibly nervous? I think I was; though, as the segment proved, unnecessarily so that time, for we segment are being made, at St. Louis, to manufacture the weapon.—Sac, Union. proved, unnecessarily so that time, for we soon teached the higher current to the east, and rapidproved, unnecessarily so that time, for we soon reached the higher current to the east, and rapidly sped on to safety, landing in a very short time right in the midst of our eamps, not two miles from our starting place. That was one day's experience, and I shall probably have many such if this war continues long.

But the wind was last bearing us to the west, and in a very few moments we were over Fairfax Court House; by descending a little we could see Court House; by descending a little we could see plainly the rebel cavalry, who were scouting in hundred yards. The editor of the St. Louis Rethat vicinity; with the exception of those scouts, there was no force there; a few moments more brought us over Centerville, and there, within and around thousand bough huts, were the mortal enemies of those whose tents but a little time before lay below us on the banks of the Potomac. We were near enough to have a fair view of their numbers, to get all the information we wanted, and stir up, quite an excitement in their midst, if we could judge by the evident agitation of the south of the standard properties and the standard pr stock, which is quickly reversed, and the gun is ready for firing. The ball is rammed into the chamber with a sliding rammer, by the movement of returning the stock to its place. The editor closes as follows:
