Lincoln might be defeated. If all were defeated but Lincoln, he would give him a trial. If he administered the affairs of State wisely and con-stitutionally, he would be thankful; if not—if he attempted to encourage sectional legislation and administered affairs disparagingly to any part of the country, turn him out. I was not for break ing up this Government, because, forsooth the phase of the last Congress. What was the true has of any set of politicians had miscarried. If we are to have a revolution on such a pitiful pretext, what stability of government do we possess ? To yield to the displeasure of a cer tain set or party, so far as to partition a political structure of such grandeur as ours, would be to follow in the footsets of distracted Mexico. <text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>
