The peculiar class of individuals who predominate in the Congress and who have the control of its proceedings is an extraordinary one. Supposedly formed for the best interests of the nation and its citizens, all of which that party before it existed, to set up a new government, and to maintain a new government, and to enforce the new constitution on the nation, and to the political associations that are in existence. The organization of this new government is the work of the Republicans, and it is the work of the Democrats. They have been working for this new government for many years, but gradually moving in its direction until now, they are in control of the government, and the war, and the political associations that are in existence.

The following is an excerpt from the article:

"And so now, when the Republicans come to power, they will have the same system of government as they had under the Federal Government, and it is the same system that has been in existence for many years. They have been working for this new government for many years, but gradually moving in its direction until now, they are in control of the government, and the war, and the political associations that are in existence."

This article is discussing the changes in the political landscape and the role of the Republicans in shaping the new government and its policies. It highlights the continuity in the political system despite the changes in leadership.
