Whose fate it was to take her.

Beside the altar they had come
Their single state to alter.

And halted there awhile to let
The Bishop tie the "halter."

The fellow trembled, half afraid,
And seemed a solemn quake(r)

As in a shaky voice he said
He never would, "forsake" her.

But ringing clear as liquid chimes
From bells of heavy metal,
This belle with silver voice and sweet,
Agreed with him to settle.

We turned away half sad to see We turued away half and to see
This "lamb led to the slaughter,"
And had a balf a mind to "lam"
The lucky chap that got her.

EXPLAINED.—It has long been a myster how Yamhill, year after year elects such men to the Legislature as she does; (Shuck is a good hearted man,) and some have concluded that they have no other kind there. But, in the discussions on the gag resolution the other day, Mr. Woodsides explained the matter. He said that a citizen of one of the back counties of Missouri was asked why they always sent such brainless igno-rameses to the Legislature—if they had no other kind? He said they had a dod rotted sight smarter men, but they hadn't got good clothes! He believed Yambill had smarter men, but probably their clothes wern't fit to wear to the Legislature.

Judge Deady, in suspending P. B. Marple, said:

"I have long since ceased to regard anything you meet. All your acts show a degree of mental and soral obliquity which renders you incapable of distribution between truth and falsehood, or right and group. You have no capacity for the practice of law, and in that profession you will ever prove a curse to yourself and to the community. For these reasons, and allogether overlooking the present allegations or unprofessional and criminal conduct, it would be an act of mercy to strike your name from the roll of attorners."

Marple charges that the suspension has been the work of "jealousy, on account of his being an erudite scholar, more thoroughly read in the theory of the law than the court, and other members of the bar."

ERRAYA.—The proof of a portion of our outside was arread, by mistake. Several errors will be found.—In the comments upon the N. Y. News article, hast line but two, the word "par" should be omitted. In the sattleft following that, the word "anything" has "ery" too much in it; &c.

Special Notices.

In ten weeks the present volume of the Statesman will close. Our terms are $3 00 per year in advance; $4 00 if not paid in advance, but paid within 6 months; and $5 00 if not paid within 6 months. Owing to the short time intervening between the announcement of those terms and the commencement of the present volume, last spring, we did not in all cases adhere to the published terms, but in some instances we received $3 00 though not paid in advance. But the coming year we must adhere strictly to our terms, in all cases. When not paid in advance, the price will be $4 00 or $5 00, according to the time when paid. If paid strictly in advance, it will be $3 00, but not otherwise. We give notice thus early that all may be enabled to send us the $3 00 before the commencement of the new volume. We hope all in arrears will also pay up, and avail themselves of the advance terms, before the $th volume commences.
