The Wife. On earth to man there is but one His heart can love—his soul can own; Though myriads flit before his view, There is but one to whom he's true— That one can sway him to and fro, Can make him drain the cup of woe; Can give him joy, or blast his life; And that one's name is simply, wife. But in that name a world is sphered. A world by all beloved, revered, Who have the sense to know its worth, And spurn the gaudy joys of earth; For that full heart in her dear breast,— If rightly prized—evernal rest Is not with blissful sweets more rife, han that pure heart-a loving wife. Poison drops of care and sorrow, Bitter poison drops are they;

Weaving for the coming morrow
Sad memorials of to-day.

Angry words! O, let them never
From the tongue forbidden align
May our heart's lost impulse ever
Check them ever they seil the lip.

matches are nearly as chaap as dirt, when every ranged urchin can afford to have his pocket full sight the stumps of eigars which he finds in the streets, it is difficult to imagine how people could ever have lived without matches. But there is scarcely a man, over forty years of age, who cannot well remember the time when matches were not; when our ancestors used to cover up the rive coals of the wood fire with askes, and flame when the old flint, steel and tinder were attempts to strike a light, the kanckles often getting struck instead of the finit; how a light used to be kept burning all night; how at length there came a little improvement in the shape of a stick, with the end succared with sulphur, slip-ped in the oil of vitriol, which creates a flame; parent, that he had better left it unmade.

AN ELOQUENT EXPRACT .- "Generation after generation," says a writer, "have felt as we now feel," and their lives were as active as our own. They passed away like a vapor, while nature wore the same aspect the weight. After obtaining considerable assistance, however, the men succeeded in raising her to be. The heavens shall be as bright over our graves as they are around our tion of peering into the coffin and learning the paths. The world will have the same attractions for our off spring yet unborn, as found much to their surprise, instead of the remains of a corpse, a stone figure, the exact counterpart of the woman who had died. This strange story seen spread, and hundreds and thousands and we shall be at rest. Our fqueral will were present to see the strange speciacle.

The husband took the body of his departed wind its way, and the prayers will be said, and we shall be left behind in the silence and darkness of the tomb. And it may be but for a short time that we shall be spoken of, but the things of his will creep on. and our names will be forgotten. Days will continue to move on, and laughter and songs will be heard in the room in which we died; and the eye that mourned for us will be dried, and animated with joy, and even our children will cease to think of us, and will remember to lisp our names no more.
