

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES. For Representative in Congress, LANSING STOUT, of Multnomah. J. B. SYKES, of Multnomah.

For Members of the Legislature Assembly, N. P. MACK, Clackamas; ALBERT ZIEBER, Yamhill; Representative, E. R. GEART, Linn; Senator.

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION. In another column will be found a partial report of the proceedings of the Democratic Convention assembled at this place on the 20th inst.

The defeat of Mr. Grover for the nomination for Congress will strike the country with surprise. That his nomination was expected by the masses, there can be no doubt, and in view of the shortness of his term in Congress, his connection with our war claims, his intimate acquaintance with, and knowledge of the same, and the present critical position of that debt, owing to the action of the 3d auditor, the committee and Congress—in view of these considerations, that his re-nomination was desired by the people, we think there is little doubt.

That Mr. Grover was the choice of a majority of the members of the convention, is expressed in that choice had been made through the usual and regular channels, we have no doubt. The nominations were not made in the convention—they were simply brought there for ratification, and were ratified, by a vote of forty-one to thirty-three. The recognized friends of Gen. Lane elected to the convention, constituted a minority; they sought to compass Mr. Grover's defeat. The delegation from Linn county, consisting of eight, with ten votes, consulted as to their course. Through a member of their delegation, they were able to secure the nomination of Mr. Grover, to the exclusion of Mr. Harding, of Marion (a member both of the convention and legislature) upon condition that the members of the legislature from Marion county should be pledged to support Hon. Sen. Lane should be re-elected to the U. S. Senate.

Mr. Harding declared himself unauthorized to make such a pledge, and declined to do it. Some of the friends of Gen. Lane declared that if the Linn members did not oppose Mr. Grover, that Mr. Smith should be supported by Gen. Lane's friends. A caucus, or frequent caucus of the latter were held, and the Linn delegation (this is stated by Messrs. Elkins, Smith, and others of that delegation) were informed that they might name the candidate for Congress, provided it was some other person than Mr. Grover. (A minority of the Linn delegation were for Mr. Grover's nomination, irrespective of the Senatorial election.) That delegation met, and balloted for a candidate for Congress, under this proposition from the Lane caucus. Judge Williams was selected as the candidate. The delegation repaired with their selection to the place of meeting of the Lane caucus, over the "Nonpareil" Saloon. Immediately upon their entering, Mr. Smith says, "Oh, Chapman was called to the chair; a resolution was offered binding the members of the caucus to abide (in the convention) the decision of the caucus; before this was acted on, a motion to proceed to an informal ballot for a candidate for member of Congress was adopted.

That ballot gave eight votes (from Linn county) to Judge Williams, and the balance to Mr. Stout. A motion was made to declare Mr. Stout the unanimous nominee. Messrs. Smith, Elkins, and Brown, of the Linn delegation, thereupon retired, claiming that the promise to leave to their delegation the selection of the candidate had been disregarded. In this caucus the delegate from Clatsop Co., who was instructed to support Mr. Grover. He stated in the convention that he was invited into the caucus, without knowing that all the members of the convention had not been invited; but that having been in it, he felt bound to carry out its action, and he voted for Mr. Stout, and against the instructions of his county. In the caucus, also, were a few other persons, who preferred Mr. Grover; they were induced to go in there upon other considerations—under the belief that he could thus secure the nomination of a relative for Congress, as he informed us. He felt bound by the action of the caucus, and voted against Grover in the convention, though Grover was his choice over all the men in the field. In this caucus the whole business of the convention was transacted, the officers selected, the committees prepared, the resolutions agreed upon, etc. Thirty members of the convention were not at any time in the caucus; a member from Umpqua, who chanced to be present, was requested to retire, and one from Benton, who was by mistake invited there, was asked if he intended to vote for Grover; upon replying that he did, he was requested to retire.

When the convention was called to order, the action of the caucus was gone through with, Mr. Chapman was called to the chair, and taking from his hat the committee on credentials, read it. There were but two variations from the programme. One was, a motion to appoint a committee to report permanent officers for the convention; this was amended, on motion of Mr. Harding, so as to provide for electing them viva voce. The other was as follows: Mr. Hayden of Polk, desiring of ascertaining from those pocket the resolutions came, stole the march on the man assigned to move the appointment of that committee, and made the motion himself. That placed him upon the committee, and he reported that Mr. Mosher took the resolutions from his pocket. Mr. T. V. Vauit objected to Hayden's motion, and was probably the man who had been appointed chairman of the committee on resolutions. All the other members of the committee were "Lane men." Any who were present at the Eugene "National" Convention of last year, and at the Democratic Convention here this year, must have been struck with the almost precise similarity of management. In both cases all was "cut and dried" beforehand, by a secret caucus.

A side caucus, (binding the action of members,) of the character above described, to which all members are not admitted, is new to our experience respecting conventions. We cannot regard such caucuses as either regular or legitimate. To show that they are wrong in principle, it is but necessary to show that by virtue of them, less than one-third of the members of a convention can control the action of the body. Let this convention be the example. It comprised seventy-five members; forty is a majority of that number. Let us suppose the forty meet in caucus, and agree to abide the decision of the majority; twenty-one is a majority of the forty; the twenty-one outvote the nineteen, nominate the candidates, select the committees, adopt the resolutions, and transact all the business of the convention. The proceedings of this caucus are confirmed in the convention, and these twenty-one men transact the business of seventy-five, and less than one-third of the members of the convention decide its important action, and a minority may defeat the will of the majority. Had the members of this convention gone into the session of that body unbound by the proceedings of this side caucus, we think it will be conceded that Mr. Grover would have been nominated.

That there has been any bargain or understanding respecting the Senatorial succession, we do not know. We simply know that the vote of Linn county was tendered Mr. Grover, on condition above stated; and that with that vote against him, no candidate could have been nominated in convention.

There are many reports, some of them pretty well authenticated, relative to matters connected with the caucus and convention, which we do not give; and do not wish to. We simply give established facts.

About thirty members voted against the customary motion to declare the nomination unanimous, as a protest against the fairness and regularity of the manner in which it had been procured. Among these were the five members from Polk county, the three from Yamhill, the two from Marion, one from Linn, two from Benton, the two from Washington, the two from Umpqua, the two from Curry, the one from Coos, and the one from Tillamook. None of these members had either voice or vote in the real nomination of the candidates presented, and the transaction of the principal business of the convention.

We have given a calm, plain statement of facts; democrats will read, and form their own conclusions.

Mr. Stout, the candidate for Congress, whose name we publish above, is a lawyer, residing at Portland. He is a young man of good abilities and attainments, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of the community. He is a native of New York State, from whence he emigrated to California, and from there came to Oregon, in 1857, where he has since been established. He was elected upon the knowing ticket from Sacramento to the California legislature of 1856, in which body he occupied a creditable position. At the last June election he was chosen county judge of Multnomah, upon the democratic ticket, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties since the admission of the State to the Union.

Mr. Sykes, candidate for Penitentiary Inspector, formerly lived in Josephine county, but since the spring of 1853 has resided at Portland. He is well suited for the position of Inspector of the State prison.

ALYING BOG. The miserable dependent and willing slave, Hibben, has a couple of lying letters in the last Times, which manifest a baseness worthy of a mulatto. We make two extracts: "The editor of the Statesman in a letter to a gentleman in Washington, said: 'Old Joe Lane must be put down. You will see I am preparing the public mind for it.'"

Mr. Smith nobly and manfully replies that he "had rather be the friend of Gen. Lane, on principle, and be out of office, than be his enemy and have all the honors his (Gen. Lane's) enemies could confer upon him! (Smith.) This is Mr. Smith's answer to the cabal.

These are absolute forgeries and falsehoods; we never wrote the above, to any man in or out of Washington, and Mr. Smith never wrote anything of the kind to us. The balance of his letters are composed of like falsehoods, and sickening laudation of his benefactor. It is undeniable that all these letters pass under review of Gen. Lane and they are to that extent his own, and their contents are his own self-praise, his low blackguardism, and vile personal abuse. Hibben is Gen. Lane's cur, (of African extraction) and barks at his bidding.

EP We have said elsewhere that the defeat of Mr. Grover for re-nomination would strike the country with surprise. We think that surprise will not be unmixed with regret and indignation. One year ago he was nominated by acclamation by the democratic convention; it was the universal impression among the people that he was "the right man in the right place." Our great interest was the payment of the war debt. Mr. Grover better understands that debt than any other man in Oregon; he was in the war; he was in the subsequent session of the legislature, and was the author of all the legislation relative to the war and the war debt; he was on the claim commission, and had passed in review all the claims; and the rolls of that commission are before Congress and the department. He knows all about them, while we have no other man in Congress who knows anything about them. Knowing all these facts, and knowing Mr. Grover's aptitude for accounts, his talent, patience and industry, one year ago he was the spontaneous choice of the democratic masses of Oregon for Congress. The masses were not changed. Since his election he has served seventeen days in Congress creditably, and usefully; during that time he made a clear, sensible, intelligent and intelligible speech in support of the war debt, as a basis of future action. Col. Nesmith said in his speech of Wednesday night, he made the only speech ever made in Congress, (except Gov. Stevens'), which has been, or was calculated to be, of any service to the debt. Our war debt is now in a very critical position, and it will occur to many that Mr. Grover was just the man who was needed to look after it in the next Congress. Why was he not nominated? Will the people tell us?

In making the above remarks, we would not disparage Mr. Stout; he is all we have said of him elsewhere, and a gentleman of fine social qualities besides. But it is no disparagement of him to say that Mr. Grover better understands the war debt than he does; for he has had far better opportunities to obtain knowledge respecting it.

EP It will be seen that the black republicans have nominated Hon. David Logan for Congress. He is well known throughout the State. We think he is the strongest man they could have placed in the field, though he will hardly come up to the Atlantic republican tests. Holbrook, who was sorely disappointed in not receiving the nomination, would have been a better sample. There are some good things in their platform and some slightly colored things. But it is unexpectedly decent to come from such a body as the convention was.

"Weeping Jeremiah" wanted to be Congressman and he was assigned to the penitentiary.

DOES IT PAY THE PEOPLE?—Oregon may well ask, does the sanction of a personal party to minister to the ambition and vanity of Gen. Lane pay the country? The last act of said personal party, was by impure coalition and unfair action, to sacrifice La Fayette Grover. We candidly believe that Grover, in the next Congress, would be worth more to the interests of Oregon than all the service Gen. Lane could render there in a lifetime. What say the scrip holders?

COPPER.—Gen. McCarver has some fine specimens of copper ore which he discovered somewhere in the Cascade Mountains.

THE PERSONAL PARTY.

If any one has doubted the existence of a deep-laid plan on the part of Gen. Lane and his friends, to build up and sustain a personal party within the Democratic organization in Oregon, and to retain all official power, honors and emoluments in the hands of a coterie devoted solely to Lane's interests, the events of the past week must remove the last doubt as to the real state of the case. No one, who is not willingly and interestedly blind, can fail to see, in the course pursued by the friends and supporters of Gen. Lane, both previous to and in the State Convention, a determination to make their one-man hobby the paramount issue in the Convention, and, even at the peril of the interests of the country, and the risk of destroying the democratic organization, to visit their condemnation upon all who refused to aid their darling scheme of perpetuating Gen. Lane in Congress, and thereby perpetuating their own power and influence. For several years past, by all the means in their power,—by liberal promises, by the judicious distribution of offices and official patronage, and by convenient bargaining with the opposition,—they have been adding strength to this personal party, and riveting the chain which should bind Gen. Lane like a mill-stone upon the neck of Oregon. For some time past, whenever they have considered themselves strong enough to make the attempt, they have endeavored to proscrib all who would not succumb to the one-man power, and, regardless of principle or self-respect, substitute fealty to the man for fealty to the principles of the democratic party. This proscription was carried into the election last year; and, in more than one county in the State, the Lane influence (we do not speak of Lane's immediate individual influence, but of that of his personal friends and supporters,) was lent to the defeat of regularly nominated democratic candidates, for the sole reason that they were known or suspected to prefer some one else to Gen. Lane for official position. This influence was used secretly, of course, (although Hibben indiscreetly avowed that he would support no candidate for the Legislature who was not for Lane for the Senate.) But last winter, in the Territorial Legislature, the Lane party, emboldened by the circumstance that no opposition had been offered to the election of Gen. Lane to the U. S. Senate, and confident in their supposed strength, evinced a spirit of intolerance, and even of truculence towards anti-Lane democrats, which was both unjustifiable and unbecoming, and which was at length carried to such an extent as to excite expressions of surprise and disapprobation from the opposition members. In that Legislature, the Lane democrats fairly outdid the bitterest of the opposition in their attacks upon and persecution of anti-Lane democrats; and in one instance, where some of the Lane party opposed a measure of public importance, they did not hesitate to avow, as the reason of their opposition, that one of the parties interested in the measure was believed to be unfriendly to Gen. Lane. In short, the whole conduct of the Lane party in the last Territorial Legislature, was tyrannous and intolerant to the last degree, and such as, it was believed, would be heartily condemned by the intelligence and good sense of the masses of the democratic party.

But this spirit of intolerance and proscription reached its climax last week, when, regardless alike of the first and dearest interests of the State, and of the known wishes of a large majority of the democratic party, a minority of the State Convention, by means which we need not detail here, procured the sacrifice of Mr. Grover to this unholy personal alliance. It is undeniable that Mr. Grover was the first, last and only choice of the democracy of Oregon for Representative to Congress; a majority of the delegates came to the Convention fully intending to support him, and to urge his nomination; but it had been decreed by the Lane party that Mr. Grover must be defeated. It was not charged that he had been deceived in his duty; it was not even attempted to be denied that he had been energetic, faithful and persevering in the discharge of his trust; it was acknowledged that he had rendered most efficient aid to our interests during the short time he was permitted to act as our Representative; but he was accused of an act of mere hostility to Gen. Lane. His offense (one of great enormity in the eyes of the Lane men) was that he had refused to become a mere echo and plant tool of Gen. Lane; that he had dared to maintain his self-respect and independence in spite of the efforts which were made to draw him to the support of the personal party; and that he had chosen to devote his time and influence at Washington to the interests of his constituents and of the country, rather than to the perpetuation of Gen. Lane in office. This was the crime, and the only crime, for which Mr. Grover was ostracized. There was no other pretext for the conduct of the Lane party, but that Mr. Grover had not committed himself unconditionally to Lane and his interests. Gen. Lane's relatives and retainers (in office and expecting to be) were in the convention, when they could get in, and about when they could not, zealously conspiring for Grover's defeat. That the gist of the matter was Lane-ism, and nothing else, was manifest from the refusal of the Lane caucus to keep their promise with the Linn delegation. After promising that that delegation might name the candidate, they refused to accept Judge Williams, when they had named him, avowing that he was not for Lane. He, no more than Grover, would consent to sink his identity, become a mere echo of Gen. Lane, and devote himself to his praise. It is by no means certain that the order for this deed has not come from Washington City! Mr. Mosher was one of the candidates for Congress voted for in the Lane caucus.

Mr. Grover and his friends had every reason to believe and to expect that he would be returned to the position which he had filled with honor to himself and with faithfulness to his constituents. He had, by his untiring industry, laid the foundation for future usefulness in that position; he had prepared a large amount of work, involving the vital interests of Oregon, to be completed at the next Congress, in which he had shown himself peculiarly qualified to serve our interests as our Representative. His defeat at this time, and under existing circumstances, will be construed into a disapproval of the measure he has urged in our behalf; it will be considered as a virtual acknowledgment of the truth of the charge that our war debt is founded upon fraud and speculation, that the ablest and most earnest advocate of the justice of our claims upon the government has been virtually condemned and stricken down, without even the form of an accusation, and in the face of a most able and eloquent effort for the payment of those claims. Mr. Grover is not the party most injured by this transaction. Although he cannot but experience regret and mortification at the ingratitude and treachery of which he has been betrayed, he can point with pride to his stainless record, and defy the petty malice of his enemies. He now, more than ever, occupies a position in the esteem and affection of the people of Oregon, from which no fraud or trick can remove him. To him, personally, this defeat is not important. He has been wronged by unfair means, but the people will right him in their own good time. The democratic party is the sufferer by this wrong. The country is the sufferer; and every individual citizen of the State of Oregon will have cause to regret the spirit of personal partisanship which sacrificed the harmony of the democratic party, and the best interests of the State.

The above is the official report of the proceedings of the democratic convention, which the secretary kindly permitted us to copy. It is very incomplete. We supply a few of the omissions: Mr. Hayden, of the committee on resolutions, dissented from the report of the committee. A resolution, endorsing Gen. Lane as delegate, was reported, which does not appear. The last resolution, which purports to have been reported by the committee, was offered in the evening, by Mr. Van Syckle, as a substitute for the one that does not appear. The first resolution was adopted without a nay, the second with one nay, the third with three nays, upon objections to the President's tariff policy, and others from objection to the Kansas policy. A motion to amend by excepting his tariff policy was not put; a motion to amend by excepting his Kansas policy was lost with about a half dozen yeas. The fourth resolution was adopted amid much laughter, with one dissentient. The last resolution was adopted upon the call of the yeas and nays, 30 members voting nay. A motion to declare the nomination of Mr. Stout unanimous was adopted, upon a call of the yeas and nays, 43 voting yea, and 31 voting nay.—A great many motions, and votes of various characters, decisions of points of order, appeals therefrom, &c., transpired, which are not enumerated. In choosing members of the central committee, Joe Lane Jr. was appointed for one of the Willamette counties. The chairman of that committee was elected by a viva voce vote. Joe Lane Jr. receiving about twenty votes for that position.
