The newspapers east of the Cascades, folowing in our judgement a very mistaken policy, have very carefully avoided mention of the prevalence of small-pox in that region, or then they have alleded to it, the impression has been sedulously conveyed that the disease was of mild form and had not extensively pread. We are forced to believe by undoubtd evidence that this is not the case. There rave been a very large number of cases at the Dalles, many of which have resulted fatally. The city authorities thought it necessary to provide a hospital to which patients could be onveyed and kept isolated from the community, but this measure was not adopted until the contagion had spread among the families of the town so widely that the good effects which otherwise might have resulted, were not obtained. A gentleman who left there about contrary, we are confident that no cases have yet occurred west of the Cascade Mountains. but we cannot hope for this exemption long. Large numbers of persons are continually coming from the Dalles to the Willamette Valley. and it is impossible that all of them can escape contamination. We regard it as certain therefore that the disease will visit Western Oregon, and it behooves every one to take such precautions as will lessen the danger from it.

The chief of these is vaccination. No fact in medicine is better established than that innoculation with the vaccine virus is a preventive of the fatal effects of this otherwise most dangerous of eruptive fevers. It is the duty of every citizen-it is especially the duty of every one who has children-to lose no time in having this simple operation performed. It is inexpensive, does not in its development incapacitate the patient for ordinary business, and if thorough in its operation gives certain immunity. If every person in Oregon could be vaccinated to day, it would save no doubt handreds and perhaps thousands of lives. Where the operation has been long since performed. or there is doubt whether its effect was comolete, it can do no harm to repeat it, and this should be done. We urge carnest and immediate attention to this matter, confident that those who follow our advice will have no cause to regret it hereafter.
