THE APPENDICITIS FAD.—Not one patient in ten who is operated on for appendicitis is a sufferer from the disease. An occasional case of appendicitis requires operation, but the appendix craze is in full swing among the people, as well as among many doctors. Many good physicians are inclined to regard any pain or ache situated below the diaphragm as due to a fullfledged case of appendicitis, requiring immediate operation for a fat fee. The leading men in the profession are to blame, for they refuse to raise their voices against an abuse which they know exists and the insistence of patients themselves for the frequency of these unnecessary operations.

Gallstones.—These result from the accumulation within the system of retained mineral matters and are particularly serious where alkali water is used. The treatment depends to some extent upon the peculiar conditions present. As a rule, however, fasting or light diet with free drinking of distilled or lithia water, enemas, sweat baths, the use of absolvents and abundant exercise to induce perspiration will do much toward giving relief. The hot sitz bath, hot applications and avoidance of mental strain are important. In a large number of cases the only cure is a radical operation and this when performed by a competent surgeon is not especially difficult, painful or dangerous.

Brain Disorders.—Congestion of the brain most frequently results from worry and anxiety of the mind, producing sleeplessness, followed by engorgement of the small blood vessels of the brain, sudden loss of vital power and almost instant death. Apoplexy may be an inherited disease, or it may be induced by too free living or its opposite, too great abstemiousness. Paralysis may affect only a small part of the body, from a finger or a toe to an entire limb, or it may disable half the body or the whole body, when death soon follows. When half the body is affected with paralysis, we may be certain that the seat of the disease is in the opposite side of the brain, because the nerve fibres cross.

WEDDING WAS INTERRUPTED.
 Halt Ceremony While Sally "Jagged" the Chickens.
 Bishop Candler of Georgia recently told one of the national lawmakers from that State an experience he had when he first began to preach the gospel and the nuptial knots, says the Washington Times.
 "One day I was called on and engaged to marry a couple in one of the out-of-the-way districts. I found the house a rudely constructed log affair, with but one room and a loft above, which was entered by a ladder and a trap door. A big table was in the center of the room, and it was loaded with good things to eat, everything having been cooked on an open fireplace which took up nearly all of one side of the room. The bride and groom lined up and I was proceeding with the ceremony, and while in the most impressive part of it, the old lady poked her head out of the trap door in the loft and called:
 "Sally, turn them chickens and jag 'em with a fork."
 "The command was obeyed by the daughter, she leaving the trembling bridegroom while she jagged 'em with a fork. I could not help laughing at the ludicrousness of the whole affair, and I have never witnessed a marriage ceremony since without remembering this experience."

Stevenson in Samoa.
 Stevenson's life in Samoa is, in some ways, the most interesting story of all, and here again you can find that story in his own writing. This time, however, it is in his letters more than in his books. These letters are so vivid, moreover, that you feel as if you were right in Samoa with him. You are living in his spotless little box of a house, called Vailima, which means "five rivers," and so reminds you that it is within sound of flowing streams. There, from the broad veranda—and the house is almost half veranda—you can look straight up on one side at the wooded Vaea Mountain; and on the other side down 600 feet before you gleams the sea, "filling the end of two valleys of forest." The house is built in a clearing in the jungle. The trees about it are twice as tall as the house; the birds about it are always talking or singing; and here and there among the trees echoes "the ringing sleighbells of the tree toad."—St. Nicholas.
