CLEAR MOUTHS OF VOLGA.
 American Engineer Also Raises the Grade in City of Galveston.
 In all ages political leaders have had it in their power to elevate or degrade provinces and nations, but to a man who made no pretenses of either political or military leadership belongs the credit of improving the condition of whole provinces in a country whose language he did not know. The task was accomplished by an American engineer who, in 1897, was sent for by the Russian minister of ways and communications and commissioned to study the question of deepening the Volga river.
 Upon completing his work he observed that on account of the alluvial deposits at the mouth of the rivers emptying into the Black sea the channel was so choked that for generations it had been necessary for the vessels carrying grain toward the sea to transfer it at the mouth, where lighters took it to the ships on the Black sea. As a result the profits of the producer were eaten up by the cost of the double transfer at the mouths of the rivers. The work of Mr. Bates, the engineer, in deepening the mouths of the rivers obviated the necessary for this economic waste and made the difference between poverty and prosperity for millions of Russians.
 Another of Mr. Bates' great engineering feats described by French Strother in "The World's Works," is that of raising the grade of the city of Galveston. The location of that city on a low island in the gulf placed it at the mercy of the fierce storms which rage along the coast and after the disaster of 1900 it was determined to raise the surface of the city above the danger level. The average depth of the fill called for in the contract is seven and one-half feet, although in some places the new elevation is seventeen and one-half feet greater than the old. This involves the dredging of more than 11,000,000 yards of sand and distributing it over an area of about two square miles.
 This amount of material is of sufficient volume to build five pyramids each of the size of Cheops, the largest in Egypt, and when it is completed 2,156 dwellings will have been raised to the new level and set on new foundations and all the sewers, gas pipes, water pipes and electric conduits will be elevated accordingly. The method employed is to pump sand from the outer side of the sea wall and discharge the mixture of sand and water through pipes to the parts of the city to be raised, where the water drains off and leaves the sand.
A Quiescent Terror.
 The summer resident looked with ill-concealed delight on the packing away, preparatory to shutting up the suburban cottage for the winter.
 "The lawn mower is a good thing," he muttered, "as long as you don't have to push it along."—Baltimore American.
 Baseball players seem to lack enterprise. Up to date none of them have started a correspondence school.
 The average country boy is pretty well satisfied with life if he doesn't have to do the churning.
 Isn't it surprising that jokers get so few whippings?
