Warning Notes Calling the Wicked to Repentance.

LIVING is the only way of learning to live.
 The fool sacrifices his wisdom to his wit. Wandering never finds any terminus but woe. Raising the wind often reaps the whirlwind. The torch of truth must be fed by the heart. Only in ministry is the secret of manhood.
 Winds of flattery waft no one to the skies. All things must depend on the things within. If your goodness is goody-goody, it is no good. The impact of your life will depend on its uplift. You cannot save souls unless you sow yourself. Many a little obedience has led to a large blessing. If you really love your Lord you will never be lonely. You do not rise in the world by giving yourself airs. The uphill road always looks steeper until you are on it. It is your motive that gives moral value to your money. Praying for calm is not the best way to prepare for storm. It takes more than a melting mood to soften a hard heart. No great work was ever done without the shedding of blood. It's easy to shut your eyes and talk of a world where there is no God. Jesus becomes Christ and Lord only as He becomes central in all our living. The brightness of your crown does not depend on the darkness of your frown. Everyday goodness in living is the best commentary on the law and the Gospel.

HIS TWIN GIRLS.
How Two Boyish Names Were Corrupted into Feminine.
 When, after the successive advent of four daughters, twin sons were born to Professor Shawe of Canby Academy, he was a proud father indeed. The two sturdy babies received the names of Darius and Richard, which the professor explained to his friends were good names, historic names and family names all at once, and had besides the advantage of suggesting good nicknames or none—a thing always worth considering in the naming of boys. If Richard should become Dick, why, Dick was as satisfactory as Richard; and Darius probably would retain its classic entirety, but if it did not, what could it become but Dare? Dick and Dare—could there be more manly, attractive, picturesque nicknames for a pair of fine boys? Alas for the good professor's hopes! It is as impossible to calculate what nickname his nates will bestow on a small boy as where lightning will strike. Richard did not become Dick nor Darius Dare. A big boy at school promptly discovered that Richard Shawe suggested "Ricksshaw," which at last became "Ricksshaw," which in turn was cut down to "Jinny"—and remained there. Equally unexpected was the fate of Darius. There was in the boys' class a girl much larger and older than he, named Maria, whose stupidity kept her with the little ones. Darius and Maria are names easily confused when quickly spoken, and the two were constantly answering the teacher in each other's stead. So perhaps it was merely natural that they should presently be known as Big Maria and Little Maria, "Little Maria" and "Jinny" the professor's boys remained through primary, grammar and high school, and well into their college days. They accepted their feminine cognomens cheerfully enough; but it was long before their father became reconciled to the inquiry from teasing friends: "Well, professor, and how are your twin girls to-day?"—Youth's Companion.

 An inquirer asks the New York Sun: "What has become of the comets? Some twenty-five years ago there were whoppers on exhibit, or, at any rate, they seemed immense to my youthful eye. Are they out of fashion? Are more expected to put in an appearance at some future time? I should like to show a good specimen to my children."
