

The Oregonian.

PORTLAND, MONDAY, AUGUST 10, 1885.

TRADE INTERESTS.

Some two years ago THE OREGONIAN published an article predicting that demagogues of business throughout the Northwest would follow the completion of the Northern Pacific railway. It foretold what has since resulted, that the Northwest would be overrun with representatives of all classes of eastern establishments...

A LOCAL HARDSHIP.

The Willamette river has two mouths. Its main channel connects with the Columbia river twelve miles from Portland, but a side channel passes down west of Sauvie's island and enters the Columbia at St. Helens. This side channel, known as the Willamette slough, is deep and navigable for steamboats for its whole length of twenty miles.

The farmers of this lower river are suffering under a singular hardship. Two or three years ago the government engineers, with the idea of directing the natural current of the slough or the greater part of it through the upper and main outlet to the Columbia, and so, by an indirect flow of water to keep out destructive shoals at that point, built a dam across the upper end where the water enters. A narrow steamboat passage was left in this dam, but the water rushes through it with such force that during most of the time it is not safe to attempt to pass the smaller boats, such as ply the slough, to make the passage.

GRANT AS THE SILENT MAN.

General Grant was a man who could be intimately known to no great number. He was a reserved, taciturn, and dignified man, who was never sought popularly by the cheap method of flattery...

There are 600 butter factories in Iowa, 477 in Illinois, 130 in Wisconsin, 100 in Kansas, 100 in Minnesota, 61 in Missouri, 50 in Indiana, and 40 in Nebraska—a total of 1788 in eight states. The value of the dairy products in Iowa alone in 1884 was $20,000,000, and that of the United States was $50,000,000. The value of the milk of the United States is about $700,000,000, or more of the entire capital stock of all the national banks and trust companies of the country.

GRANT'S BURIAL PLACE.

In reply to an article in the Tribune a few days ago pointing out that New York city was not entitled to the honor of keeping the repositary and guardian of Gen. Grant's remains, the Tribune has published an advertisement in which it asks the Tribune to publish a notice that it is not entitled to the honor of keeping the Old Commander's ashes, because from the time Gen. Grant drew his sword in defense of the Union to the day he died it has opposed the principles which he represented.

EARTH-BURIAL.

In the preparation of the body of Gen. Grant for burial, and in the interment, every effort has been made for its preservation; and yet, it will not be long preserved. Nor is there any "Dust to dust" is the simple order of nature. These our bodies, as the poet Walter expresses it, are but the outcasts we inhabit. By time they are buried and decayed they are called into them no longer, and then even our dear friends must put them out of sight.

WASHINGTON'S FUNERAL.

The funeral of Gen. Grant, which was held at the residence of the late general, was a grand and imposing affair. The funeral was held at the residence of the late general, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives. THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY.

"We rise," says the democratic paper at Pendleton, "to request THE OREGONIAN to inform an anxious public what has become of the southern confederacy lately." The southern confederacy, which was formed in 1862, and lasted until 1865, was a political entity that sought to secede from the United States. It was formed in 1862, and lasted until 1865.

REAL AND IMAGINARY LAND VALUES.

One effect of the hard times has been to reduce the price of farming lands all over the state, and particularly in the Willamette valley. Farms which have been sold in past years for twenty dollars and upwards per acre, are in the market for five and ten dollars. This is a sad state of affairs, and is the result of the hard times.
