PAINE FROM HISTORY

DR. LOCKE AGAIN SERMONIZES UPON THE GREAT INFIDEL.

He Thinks That Drink Was His Beseiting Sin-What Historians Generally Say.

At the Taylor-street First Methodist church last evening, Dr. Charles Edward church last evening, Dr. Charles Edward Locke delivered a sermon on "The Fruits of Inidelity." Every part of the large church was crowded, and many could not even find standing room. Dr. Locke's text was Mat. vil:18: "Do men gather grapes of thorse or figs of thisties?" In beginning his sermon, Dr. Locke said he desired to add some supplementary remarks to the sermon of last Sabbath marks to the sermon of last Sabbath writing. He spoke as follows:

"By your couries; I may say, by way of introduction, that it is not my purpose to traduce the character of any man neither do I take pleasure in inveighing against the shortcomings of an opponent. Fair play and common sense are watch-words of this pulpit. The references in a recent sermon to the acknowledged irregularities in the life of Tom Paine were not presented as arguments, but as in-cidental Hilbstrations. We would be glad if the adorers of Paine could make out a tiear case for their idol. What I have written, I have written is an hexorable law of history. It is to be presumed that those who wrot as the contemporaries of Paine would be in possession of facts which would not be available to the sympathetic biographer of 5 years later. It is, perhaps, a commendable trait of the human heart that subsequent generations are willing to cast a robe of charity over even most behavus imperfections. "It is, however, due to the honest in-vestigator to know that unbiased and unprejudiced historians do not relieve Paine of the charge of gross impurity and in-

The English Encyclopedia, edited by The English Encyclopenia, cure. S. Charles Knight, says: The work ('Age of Reason') allenated from him his friends in America as well as in England, excited feelings of the deepest disgust and abhortage of the deepest disgust and abh reace in the whole Christian community of both countries, and with his coarseness of speech, intemperance and licentious-ness of conduct, exposed him to hatred and columny to such a degree as to emand califmry to such a degree as to em-litter the latter years of his life.' A sim-ilar statement may be found in the Scotch Encyclopedia, and also in Apple-ton's "Cyclopedia of American Blogra-phy.' Readers of Burke's speeches will remember the caustic reference to Paine's sober moments. The testimony of Grant Thorburn, an acquaintance of Paine, in his 'Forty Years' Residence in America,' because of the eminence of the writer, must be taken in evidence. I cannot clie the page, but I have in my possession a trustworthy quotation, which, after referring to Paine as 'bedaubed with snuf and stupefied with brandy, once a companion of Washington, Jay and Hamilton, and now deserted by good men,' declares 'he is the most disgusting being you can meet on the street-his countenance bloated beyond description.' It is sought to invälidate these statements by a letter from W. Carver, at whose house Faine his 'Forty Years' Residence in America, from W. Carver, at whose house Paine lived, in which Carver explains that when he made certain charges against Paine he was in a fit of anger. Carver, however, but acknowledged himself as a faisifier, and we, therefore, come back to Thorburn, who as an acquaintance of Paine testifies concerning what he had himself concerning the proceeded to snow in the truits of infidelity among rations, citing in illustration. France and Germany, and showing certain tendencies in America. "The fruits of infidelity among rations, citing in illustration france and Germany, and showing certain tendencies in America. "The fruits of infidelity among rations, citing in illustration france and Germany, and showing certain tendencies in America. "The fruits of infidelity in society are seen in the fact that infidelity establishes no great philanthropies. It endows no great philanthropies." from W. Carver, at whose house Paine dimself observed. "Nor is it sufficient for Conway, in his recent and most plausible life of Paine, to turn down the statements of Thorburn by the sarcastic reference to 'pious Grant Thorburn'—the piety of the witness disenalifying him to give testimony in the court over which Conway presides. But it is futal to the defication which this seeks for his hero that at least twice in the second volume he writes with the fmpartiality of the real historian. He says, page 50: 'He drank freely, as was the custom of his time.' No intimation of ernible in any contemporary record of Paine until his 57th year. He afterward told his friend Rickman that, borne down by public and private afflicion, he had been driven to excesses in Paris.' Again, on page 351, after an unsuccessful attempt to dispose of Joel Barlows' remark that Paine 'seeks refuge in low company, looks for consolation in the sordid, solitary bottle,' the author mays: 'If any can find satisfaction in the belief that Paine found no Christian in America so merciful as rum, they may perhaps discover some grounds for it in a brief period of his 50th year. While living in the house of Carver, Paine was seized with an illness that threatened to be mortial, and from while, he never fully. 'By their fruits ye shall know chicken wheat 67%675c per cental. lion, he had been driven to excesses in be mortal, and from which he never fully recovered. It is possible that he was kept alive for a time by spirits during the terrible time, but this ceased in the later part of 1805." These admissions are fatal to the case which Conway is striving to establish for his client. "Allibone's 'Dictionary of Authors' not only refers to the habits of Paine as intemperate, tyrannical, licentious and pro-fane," but it gives the testimony of a contemporary of Paine, Gilbert Wakefield, who as an acquaintance of Paine, in his notice of part second of the 'Age of Reason,' says, 'His excess of folly will be lamented by all his friends not estranged, like himself, from shame and modesty. I am not acquainted with such a compound of vanity and ignorance as 'Thomas Paine in the records of literary CORDRAYS-Charles Riggs company in 'Passay's Slave.'

"Agair, William Linn, in 1791, referring to the 'Age of Roason,' says: 'It must mak into infamy and carry his own name slong with it. There is nothing new in the performance, save the bold and in-decent runner. It is provoking to see the Christian religion, after having withstood Allibone in his dictionary says that Paine in 1802, in replying to an infidel admirer, said: "I am sorry that that work ("Age of Beason") ever went to press. I wrote it for my own simusement, I would give workle, had I them at my command, had the "Age of Reason" never been published. I would advise you, said Paine, ng his eye to meet Mr. K.'s, 'not to

of that work."
This pulpit has been criticised for not ascribing highest greatness to Paine, because of what he accomplished for freedom. When the influence of a life is being summed up and a place assigned to it, the entire career must be before As well might these devotees of T Pathe insist that in America, and England, and in France, Arnold and Andre and poor Delessers should be classified with the moblest pairiots whose characters were never defiled by traiterous crimes and dishonest negotiations. If corruption is thus to be coronated, what is the reward for persistent virtue? That Paine was a useful factor in establishing this republic, we will agree, but his sub-sequent blasphemous ribaldry and traiter-ous conduct toward the moral standards of the nation sought to overthrow the very institutions which formerly he labored to establish, hence he has deprived himself of classification among the greatest patriots. A discriminating and outraged posterity gave to Palse his so-briquet of 'Tom' Palne long before this preacher was born.

"Again, it would be fudicrous if it were not so lamentable that there are really some intelligent people who insist that Paine's arguments against Christianity have never been refuted. A vigorous writer in our own city journalism has discriminately remarked 'his so-called theological works are crude and shallow. theological works are crude and shallow, and are scarcely entitled to mention in the history of rational thought." Robert Hall remarked just after the 'Age of Reason' was published; 'Why, str, it is a mouse nibbling at the wings of an archangel.' Paine's poisonous defamations were immediately refuted by a score of able writers. His writings abound in so many contradictions and ignorant references to the Scriptures that it is easy to believe Paine's own confession in part II that he did not have a copy of the Bible at hand when he wrote his attack upon it.

'The New York Tribune of March 25, 1876, said of Paine: 'His best arguments, if they may be so called, would not, if first published today, attract the slightest attention, nor would anybody think them worthy of sericus refutation.'
"Palne's works so abound in sophistries, fallacies, blunders and contradictions that if a student in one of our theological seminaries could not uncover the vulnerable places in this blatant assailant, he would not be entrusted to preach the gospel to the half-civilized nations of the South

"In this discussion I am not willing to indulge in any personal asperities with any of my fellow townsmen. If we would find the truth we must learn to differ without acrimonious contention. I have not remained quiet at this time because it is a disastrous lesson to the youth of our generation that there should be an ostentatious and unjustified and erratic adoration of a character so imperfect and unbalanced, not to say coarse, corrupt and biasphemous, as that possessed by Tom Paine. It is not agreeable to dwell in the pollutions of biography, but if the thoughtful auditors before me shall have secured a more faithful view of a dangerous exponent of unbellef, the dis-cussion will not have been without good

"Poor Tom Paine! He died June 8, 1809. Those who would exalt him to the highest pinnacle of fame will be disposed, per-haps, to omit from their extravagant eulogies that, though he was born a Quaker, yet to such an extent had he out-raged his people by his infidel teachings and infidel life that he was refused burial by the Quakers, and was interred in a field on his own estate."

Dr. Locke now entered upon the discussion of his theme, with the remark: "There is an irrepressible conflict between Christianity and infidelity, as representing right and wrong, truth and error, rever ence and blasphemy. My definition of an infidel I will borrow from the Century dictionary—'A disbeliever in religion or divine revelation in general; especially one who denies or refuses to believe in the Christian riigion, while accepting no other.' It is in this sense that I use the words infidel and infidelity."

Dr. Locke proceeded to show the fruits of infidelity among nations, citing in illustration France and Germany, and showechools. A few years since the New York Herald made an investigation and found that in 1896 there were 20 colleges in this country, of which eight were infidel; but now, out of 356 colleges, 312 are religious; 6i secular, but not one infidel; and further says there is not one atheistic college or university in the world. As an illustra-tion of the effects of infidelity on society the exercise of the town of Liberal.

the experiment of the town of Liberal, Mo., was referred to.

"The defilement of infidelity produces no such disastrous results as in the harvest of tares which come forth in individual character. Infidelity produces moral covarious dissipation and crime: a petcowardice, dissination and crime; a petrifaction of once tender hearts and sym-pathetic feelings; and infidelity leads to despair. To each 100,000 inhabitants there

"By their fruits ye shall know them.' If infidelity is judged by its nevitable products, it is thorns and shistles, and men need not deceive themselves into the hope of gathering a har-vest of grapes and figs. No: infidelity, judged by its fruits, is a curse to nations A curse to society! A curse to individual character!"

Dr. Locke closed his sermon with an account of the conversion of the noted infidel, william Hone, celebrated in Eng-land as the author of the "Every-Day Book," and other works.

At the opening prices were generally a fraction higher, but the improvement was not of long duration, and before the end of the first 15 minutes the market had become dull and lost all its tone. The annual report of the Northwestern railroad was made public about this time, showing a deficit of $1,650,698, against a surplus of $880. Lot for the year 1880. This led to a selling movement in that stock, which was quickly communicated to the rest of the active list, and prices continued to decline to the close, final sales being at or near the lowest figures of the day. Northwestern led in the transactions, opening 'h higher, and closing 14 below yesterday's last price. The tendency in the main was downward, prices beginning to sax the very first day of the week, the depression being largely due to the delay in announcing the government issue. Other factors in the heaviness of speculation were the defeat of the Union Pacific funding bill in the house of representatives and the unfavorable statements of caroliags of Western roads. The defeat of the Springer bill in the house assisted to depress prices alightly, but the street had largely discounted the result.
