

GANG MURDER

HARRY HAYWARD ONCE MORE ON THE WITNESS STAND. The Day Devoted to Explicit Denials of the Statements Made by His Brother and Blixt.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 25.—Harry Hayward resumed the witness stand in the Gling murder trial today. Mr. Erwin, counsel for defense, said to Harry Hayward: "Mr. Hayward, I want you to take up your story just where you left off. You stated that you got back to the Ozark about 11 o'clock the night of the murder after taking Miss Bartleson home from the theater."

"I want to correct one statement," said the witness. "I was not at Chicago May 5, as reported by the press. I was in Chicago the night I returned to the Ozark. I went into the Heenepp-avenue entrance into the basement, and into Blixt's room. About the water meter, I do not know. The way it was running, it was ticking that night, and I spoke to Blixt something about there must be a leak. I don't know whether Blixt told me or not, but I got the impression that an accident had happened, that a horse had come back without its driver. I went out and took the elevator. Anderson, I think, told me an accident had occurred. I went up on the elevator to the fifth floor. Here I saw some policemen and a young man named Blixt. He was the trouble maker, and Goodman told me an accident had occurred. I understood that it was a lady, and my curiosity was aroused. He told me that the patrol wagon had gone out and that the body of a woman. Finally, he said that Miss Gling had gone out driving, and had not returned with the carriage. All the things that he passed before me, I think and myself came back to me. Two or three times before that she had asked me for my revolver, and I at once came to the conclusion that it was not a lady, but a man. He had been killed. Then Mr. Goodman and I went down to the police station, where I talked with Jailer McKenna. He appeared to me as if he was trying to lead me to pass away time. I wanted him to keep awake and talk to me. There was no revolver transaction, though, and that 'picking-up-money' talk did not occur. I did not take up a revolver. I do not know whether I went into my room or not."

"You did not pick up money?" "No, sir; I did not." "Here the witness went over minor points of the night, and said: "Adry was surprised when I told him. I lay there kind of figuring what I would do. I knew that the sentence would be toward me, and I wondered what those newspaper fellows would say. I got a newspaper in the morning and read it. Then I went to Waterman's room and said to him, 'I don't know what's in the office in the Oregon building that morning about 9 o'clock. I met Detective Howard at Third street and he told me they wanted to see me at the city hall.'"

"The witness testified at the time of the inquiry and of the sweating process conducted by Mayor Eustis and the assistant county attorney, and detailed how lawyer Bartleson had stated to him that he had lost $500, instead of $700, to Miss Gling, and that he was going to kill her and that he had seen her flash big money in a restaurant. He also made a general denial of having told Blixt he had secured an assignment of the life insurance and was going to kill her by a runaway or by throwing her out on some rocks. Mr. Erwin went down the line of testimony against Hayward, who steadily denying, and sometimes smiling. He denied offering Adry $100 to go and kill a stranger. A reference to the burning of the barn raised the defendant to say, looking straight at his daughter, "I know where that came from."

Late this afternoon Harry Hayward was turned over to County Attorney Nye for cross-examination. Nothing of importance was elicited, although he was questioned regarding his gambling and the loans made to Miss Gling. Hayward confirmed the main part of the testimony given by Mrs. Goodale, the clairvoyant, but denied that she had asked him to bring her into giving Miss Gling pointers to suit his own purposes. He said the first interview he had with Mrs. Goodale was right after the hold-up. She had told him about it. Harry had asked her if she was a teller. He did not take much stock in them, but he always believed in giving superstition the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Erwin at last managed to get into the evidence Harry's testimony in connection with the alleged hold-up on the road near the lake, where Harry states that Adry had held up the party while he (Harry) was driving with Misses Gling and Voder. This witness the trial.
