

Mount Hood, from Lost Lake, source of Hood River
—PHOTO COPYRIGHT PHOTO BY BENJ. A. GIFFORD, THE DALLES, OREGON.

PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND.
Illumination Rock, Near Summit of Mount Hood

PHOTO BY GIFFORD, THE DALLES, OREGON.
Summit on Mount Hood After a Storm

Three Sisters, Cascade Range, Oregon
—PHOTO BY CRAWFORD, ALBANY, OREGON

Crossing a Moraine on Mount Pitt

Exhausting Sport of Crossing the —Great Glaciers of Mount Hood

Extreme Timber Line on Great Slope of Mount Hood
—PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND

She is Near the Summit of Mount Rainier, and she is Happy

PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND.
The Deep Ice Caves of Mount Hood

PHOTO BY GIFFORD, THE DALLES, OREGON.
Mazama Party on Summit of Mount Pitt, Southern Oregon

Mazamas Climbing Mount Tahale, Washington

Mount Hood from Columbia Slough, Near Portland
—PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND

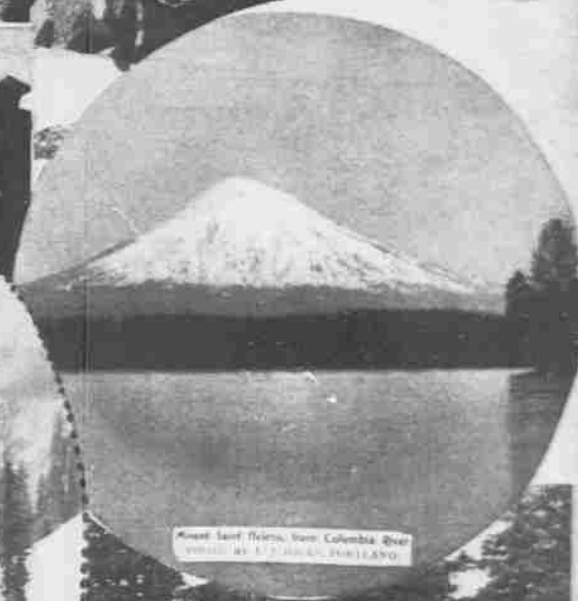

PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND.
Route of Col. L. L. Hawkin's Proposed Bicycle Path from Portland to Mount Hood

PHOTO BY A. C. WEBB, PORTLAND.
Yocum Falls on Government Camp Creek, Near Mt. Hood

Crater Lake, Southern Oregon

Mount Saint Helens, from Columbia River
—PHOTO BY L. J. HICKS, PORTLAND

A PAGE FOR THE MAZAMAS
The Mazamas, a strong organization of representative men and women, have made the many snow-capped peaks of the Cascade Range famous. These mountaineers make regular annual excursions to different points in the fastnesses of the interior mountainous districts, where the loftiest heights, reaching an elevation exceeding 14,000 feet are scaled. The Mazamas have illuminated the summit of Mount Hood at midnight, so that the great ball of red fire was plainly seen for more than 100 miles distant, and they have reached the summit of every notable peak of the Cascades. The most prominent snow-capped mountains of this range are Mount Pitt, beginning on the south, Diamond Peak, Mount Washington, Three Sisters, Mount Jefferson and Mount Hood, in Oregon, and Mount Adams, Mount St. Helens, Mount Rainier and Mount Baker, in Washington.

PHOTO BY CRAWFORD, ALBANY, OREGON.
Mount Washington, Cascade Range, Oregon

The Men Enjoy a Quiet Plunge After a Hard Mountain Climb

PHOTO BY GIFFORD, THE DALLES, OREGON.
Difficulties Encountered by The Mazamas in Reaching Base of Mount Pitt

Mazamas Encamped at Crater Lake