FILIPINOS WERE NOT DECEIVED

Only Question of Sovereignty Was Between United States and Spain.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mr. Pettigrew, of South Dakota, wasted the time of the senate on Thursday with another long tirade in defense of his friend Aguinaldo, and spewed out a flood of refuted slander of American soldiers in the Philippines. Pettigrew, in the face of official records, insists that the Filipinos were in some way deceived as to the intentions of the United States. He still declares, notwithstanding testimony that would convince any sane man, that the United States made war on its "allies." He persists in bearing false witness before the American people as to the events of the last year in Luzon. He rages bout "duplicity and concealment," and in the same breath opposes Senator Lodge's resolution asking the president to make public all the correspondence bearing on this government's relations with the Filipinos. Most of this information is already before the public, and it shows that the administration never at any time contemplated setting up a Philippine republic, nor in any way recognized the existence of any such so-called republic, nor regarded the Filipinos led by Aguinaldo as allies.

The president's order of May 19, 1898, to the commander of the military expedition to Manila, directed him to declare to the Filipinos that the Americans came not to make war upon them, but "to protect them in their homes, their employments, and their personal and religious rights." The only question of sovereignty in the Philippines was between the United States and Spain. That question was settled by the treaty of Paris. That there might be no doubt in the minds of the natives, the commander at Manila was directed on August 17, 1898, that "there must be no joint occupation," and that all must recognize the authority of the United States. General Otis was directed on December 21, 1898, to declare the extension of American sovereignty to all parts of the islands by virtue of the treaty of Paris, and "to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come not as invaders and conquerors, but as friends." He was also admonished to use every possible means to avert a conflict with the natives. No change in this proclamation was made by General Otis. Its terms as to sovereignty were so definite that the day it was published in Manila Aguinaldo issued a manifesto declaring that he had never agreed to recognize American sovereignty, and protesting against General Otis' signing himself military governor. This disposes of Pettigrew's claim that Otis endeavored to deceive the Filipinos as to American policy. Commissioners appointed by Aguinaldo met every day in January with commissioners appointed by Otis to discuss a scheme of government and American sovereignty.

Two days before the senate was to vote upon the treaty Aguinaldo declared war against the United States, and his troops attacked the American lines. The Philippine commission, on arriving in the Islands, repeated and amplified the president's preceding orders and proclamations, asserting the sovereignty of the United States over the islands and again assuring the people that the amplest self-government compatible with the rights and obligations of the United States would be granted them. The Tagal leaders knew from the beginning the attitude of this government, and were never deceived, however much they deceived their unfortunate followers.

All these facts are so well known that it would not be necessary to repeat them did not the Pettigrews in and out of the senate persist in denying them. Pettigrew is possessed of a mania for distorting truth. Cast out by the people he misrepresents and hopeless of re-election, he uses his few remaining months in the senate to attempt to make mischief wherever and whenever he can. His malign motives are so apparent that his colleagues and the country regard him as a common scold and a wearisome bore. He is a pig-headed and pestiferous political renegade, who uses his position to impede better men in the discharge of their duty. When he retires to his native obscurity, as he will in another year, the American people will give thanks for their deliverance.

Precious Stone Imports.

The report of General George W. Mindil, jewelry examiner at the public stores, New York, on the importation of precious stones and pearls into the port of New York shows the total for the calendar year ended December 31, 1899, to be $19,221,-752 55, the largest value ever brought through the port of New York in the history of the jewelry trade. Of this $5,907,-534 76 represents uncut diamonds and $13,-414,217 79 cut diamonds, precious stones and pearls. That the amount would have reached over $20,000,000 if the trade could have had all the goods desired, General Mindil is sure, as the importations for December show a falling off from the figures for the same month for the past 10 years.

DAILY METEOROLOGICAL REPORT.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS.

A rain area has again overspread the western portions of Oregon and Washington. The rain is heaviest along the Northwest coast. It is expected to extend to Eastern Washington within the next 24 hours. The temperature has generally fallen, except in Southwestern Idaho. At Walla Walla the fall was 16 deg., from 56 to 40 deg. At Red Bluff, Cal., it was 20 deg., and at Portland 6 deg. An area of high barometric pressure is central over Utah, and a low-pressure area is over Northern Montana. Another depression will move across the Canadian provinces. Southerly winds and occasional rain are indicated, except in the plateau region of Eastern Oregon and Southern Idaho. The river is falling.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS.

Forecasts made at Portland for the 28 hours ending at midnight Friday, Jan. 19:

Western Oregon and Western Washington—Occasional rain; fresh to brisk southerly winds.

Eastern Oregon—Probably rain or snow; cooler; southeast winds.

Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho—Occasional rain; east to southeast winds.

Southern Idaho — Fair weather; southerly winds, brisk to high at Pocatello.

Portland and vicinity—Occasional rain; fresh to brisk southerly winds. The river will continue falling.
