THOMAS TUCKER'S BONES

RECOVERED NINE YEARS AFTER HIS DISAPPEARANCE.

Found Near Hills City and Brought to Portland by George W. Tucker, of His Brother.

Under date of March 25, The Oregonian published a dispatch from Albany, Or., to the following effect:

"Word was brought to this city from Hills City that the bones of a man had been found at the head of Rock Creek, which had been identified as the remains of Thomas Tucker, who had been lost in a snow storm nine years ago. A gun near the bones was the means of identification."

The man whose skeleton was found was a brother residing in this city—George W. Tucker, foreman for the Northern Pacific Terminal Company. He left Portland Saturday night, secured the skeleton of his brother and brought it here Wednesday night for burial. Examination revealed the fact that there was a bullet hole through the thigh and another through the shoulder. The bones were found some eight miles distant from the Southern Pacific tracks.

Prior to his disappearance, which occurred in February, 1891, Thomas Tucker, accompanied by two companions, whose names were not learned, went out on a hunting expedition. Later his companions returned without him, saying that a heavy snow storm came up and they became separated from him. They reported that he had probably been lost in the snow. A relief party was organized and a fruitless search was made for him. His two companions, for reasons best known to themselves, declined to join the relief party. One of them has since died, and the other is reported to be somewhere in Europe.

When the bones were found they were identified by the gun found near them, as the dispatch says, and which Thomas Tucker borrowed when he started out on that ill-fated hunt. His purse, containing a $5 bill, badly weather-beaten, and a few tarnished coins were discovered with the skeleton.

At this late date it is impossible to solve the mystery of Thomas Tucker's death. It is thought that if he was shot by his companions, that the discharge may have been accidental. If they were responsible it is possible that they did not report the facts, fearing lest they should be blamed. If Tucker was intentionally slain by them, which is not probable, they would have sufficient reason for concealing the fact. As they declined to assist in the search for him, such action naturally made their conduct at the time suspicious.

UNJUST CRITICISM.

Police Department Active in Search of New Highwaymen.

John A. Van Groos, the young man shot in the leg Saturday night at the corner of East Ninth and East Morrison streets by highwaymen, who were endeavoring to rob him, writes to The Oregonian complaining that no action has been taken by the police regarding the affair. He says the officers had discharged promptly when he first reported the case, and that later, when some young men of the vicinity who thought they knew the highwaymen, telephoned the fact to the police, no detective was sent immediately. Chief McLaughlin says, to the contrary, that every effort possible with his force of officers and detectives, has been made since the hold-up, to apprehend the highwaymen. The Chief asserts positively that within 20 minutes after the hold-up officers were on the ground, when the neighborhood was thoroughly scoured, but without locating the criminals, and since then every night a special effort has been made to apprehend the men, and that it would be impossible to do more without a larger force of officers. The Chief says it is absurd to look for highwaymen around the same corner where they committed one crime on succeeding nights, as it is not the custom of criminals to go on successive occasions to the same spot for their operations. That the highwaymen are not confining their work to one place he says is evident from the work reported on the West Side since.

Concerning failure to act on the reports

HAS CORALLED THE BUG.

C. W. Tracy Has Captured Specimens of Wheat Pests.

C. W. Tracy, grain dealer, has been investigating the "bug" which has been found to be injuring old grain in warehouses of the Inland Empire, and has specimens of the "annual" in every stage of its growth, and judges it to be the time grana, as stated in The Oregonian. A dusky, grayish little moth, only about a quarter of an inch in length, deposits its eggs on grains of wheat, and when hatched they form a tiny worm or grub, which eats its way into the kernel and spins a web, which binds a number of grains together, and operates in them; finally the grub weaves a thin case around itself, and after a time emerges a full-blown moth. Mr. Tracy has been familiar with this grub in flouring mills, and supposed it was a pest which came into such places on account of the dust, and dirt allowed to accumulate in corners, etc., but he was not aware before that it infested wheat in granaries.

The insect has the same object in view in warehouses as in mills—to eat the flour—but in one place it finds the flour ready made, while in the other he has to manufacture it for himself. Farmers in the Inland Empire have usually so much wheat to care for that they are careless about it, many preferring to leave it out on platforms where it gets wet and increases in weight rather than to put it in a warehouse. Warehouses are often kept in a dirty condition, and where grain has been stored up two or three years some insect pest is quite certain to get among Prosperity at Salem. Business Man Says Capital City is All Right. J. C. Goodall, a well-known citizen of Salem, registered at the Imperial yesterday, on his return from a trip to Moscow, Idaho. Mr. Goodall thinks the Oregon state capital is "looking up" with the general prosperity of the rest of the state. Rents are stiff and considerable improvement is going on. An Odd Fellows' temple, costing $25,000, is to be erected shortly, and the new Government building, upon which $100,000 is to be expended, will be one of the city's additions this year. The state is spending $1,000 in improving the Statehouse, while a general tendency toward improvement is manifest all over the city.

"Salem's taxes seem high," Mr. Goodall said; "but in reality they are low. It is true we pay 21 mills as a total within the city limits, while those outside get along on 20, but the assessed valuation is low, not being more than one-fourth of the cash value of the property. In fact, no property-owner would care to sell his holding for even four times the assessor's valuation. Therefore, what seems to be 21 mills is really between 7 and 8 mills."

AT THE WRONG HOUSE. Charivari Party Routed by Detachment of Police. Professor Charles Dierke, the well-known music teacher, was married Wednesday, and took his bride to the home he had fitted up on Everett street, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second. As it chanced Arthur Eckhardt, an employee of the Meir & Frank Company, was married on the same day to one of the young women employed in the same establishment, and they took up their abode in a cottage next door to Mr. and Mrs. Dierke. So far everything was lovely. It chanced, however, that Mr. Eckhardt and his bride were general favorites with the employees of the Meir & Frank Company, and these employees decided that they must do something to show their respect for the newly married couple, and their approval of the example which had been set. With this object in view, about 40 of these employees marched out to Everett and Twenty-first street late Wednesday evening, armed with tin pans, saucepans, frying-pans and all sorts of pans, and especially with a hot water boiler, for a kitchen stove, which was suspended from a pole and carried on the shoulders of two of the party, while the others carried hammers to pound it with, their object being to give their friends a charivari. Unfortunately they made a mistake in the location, and wasted their sweetness on the desert air in front of Professor Dierke's house for a time. Finally they were set right and turned their batteries on the Eckhardt home; but had hardly got fairly tuned up when the police patrol—which some one in the vicinity had telephoned for—came galloping up, and the "musicians" abandoning their instruments, boiler and all, took to their heels. No one knows exactly who the joke was on, but those who paid for collecting and removing the unmusical instruments consider themselves as out and injured.
