on the head. He was quickly brought to the surface, when it was found that his scalp had been cut, and it was also thought his skull had fractured. He was taken to the Good Samaritan Hospital, where it was found that his injuries were not serious. In the evening he was reported as getting along in a satisfactory manner.

TO RELIEVE THE MAILS.

Chamber of Commerce Indorses the Loud Postal Bill.

Commendation of the Loud postal bill, now before Congress, was the only work performed yesterday by the trustees of the Chamber of Commerce. Other matters were up in the form of reports to or from the Oregon delegation in Congress, but nothing new developed in any of them.

The order of proceedings has been arranged into three divisions. The morning will be devoted to decoration of the graves by committees chosen from the G. A. R., Spanish and Filipino War Veterans and the auxiliary organizations of both the veteran associations. In the afternoon there will be the procession to Lone Fir, in which all the veterans will join. In the evening services will be held in two of the most prominent churches of the city, one on either side of the river. Thus will every phase of fitting memorial exercises be observed.

Washington, May 29.—Senator McBride and I are making strenuous efforts with the committee on appropriations of the Senate to appropriate of $250,000 for improving the mouth of the Columbia River. We have had one or two conferences already on the subject with the committee, and are preparing a strong brief showing the imperative necessity for the appropriation. We shall submit your telegram to the committee.

Senator McBride telegraphed the committee as follows concerning the same matter, and the survey for a canal at The Dalles:

Washington, May 26.—Emergency river and harbor bill reported yesterday includes an amendment authorizing survey for canal and locks between the Dalles and Celilo. The Senate today adopted an amendment to sundry bills appropriating $250,000 for jetty at mouth of Columbia.

Representative Tongue foretold the enactment of the Alaska civil code bill in the following communication:

Washington, May 17.—Yours of the 11th inst. just received. The Alaska bill will unquestionably be passed during the present session of Congress. There has not been the slightest danger of its failing to do so. I realize as much as any one the importance of settled conditions in that portion of the country.

GOVERNOR GEER SPOKE

EAST SIDE REPUBLICANS HAVE A BIG RALLY.

L. B. Cox Presides at a Bryan Free-Silver Meeting at the Metropolitan Theater.

The Republicans of the East Side held a rousing demonstration last night in the Burkhardt Hall, in the Ninth ward, and the big audience was packed with an audience of about 800 people, a considerable portion being women. A more enthusiastic gathering has never been held in that part of the city.

Richard Clinton, chairman of the committee of arrangements, called the meeting to order, and then did a very appropriate and graceful act. Calling on J. C. Jameson, president of the Albina Republican Club, he said that inasmuch as a member of the committee from the Ninth ward had presided at the big meeting held in Albina it was proper that a prominent citizen of the Tenth ward should preside at this meeting. Mr. Jameson accepted the honor amid much cheering.

Henry S. Rowe, candidate for Mayor, was then introduced, and the oration he gave from his neighbors and friends must have been gratifying. He stood some time before he could proceed, waiting for the cheering to subside. No candidate ever received such a greeting as did Mr. Rowe last night in his own ward.

Finally when quiet was restored, Mr. Rowe gave one of those clear, deliberate and pointed addresses for which he is noted, in which he set out his position and views of municipal affairs. He declared that he regarded public office a public trust, and should conduct the office of Mayor as his judgment should suggest, and in which he should enter the office, if elected, without making pledges, and should select such men as making appointments as would serve the city faithfully.

Mr. Rowe also said he regarded it the duty of the Mayor carefully and thoroughly to supervise the business affairs of the city, look after streets and sewers and other improvements. Along this line Mr. Rowe made an effective address, and received much applause at the close.

The next speaker was George W. Stapleton, and as he began his address Governor Geer entered the hall, and was escorted to the platform. His coming was the signal for another outburst, the audience standing and cheering lustily. Those on the platform also arose and greeted the Governor. Mr. Stapleton called for cheers for Governor Geer, and they were given with a will. Then Mr. Stapleton proceeded with his address. His talk opened with a resume of the national policy of the Republican party, compared with the policy of the Democratic party. Pleading on, he took up local questions. In particular he referred to the attack that years ago, but the theories of more hard times are now exploded by the very reason of our prosperity. Business has improved and is greatly increased, and we have every reason to rejoice. Every tramp you see is a Democratic argument, and is but a lingering evidence of the Democratic era. He is also an evidence of their prosperity. Under the present Republican era, it is almost impossible to get men employed from the inside of the door, and there is no greater index to the condition of the country than this very thing. Remember that we have the best, the strongest and most powerful Government on the face of the earth, and should never repeat the experience of the country when the reins were turned over to the Democratic party.

D. Solis Cohen was then introduced, and said in part:

"Our Chief Executive has just laid before us the condition of our country four years ago, and I wish to say that Oregon will stand next Monday where she stood then; for the right. Never before did a party select so many candidates from the same locality as has been done this year. Nearly all are from the East Side of the river, and while we West Siders are not jealous, we want you to understand that we expect you to return a complete Republican majority on Monday next, and we shall get a divorce and close up the bridges. Every man selected is entirely capable to fill the office for which he stands. First and foremost is the office of Mayor, upon which so much depends. The Republican candidate, H. S. Rowe, is a man who will fill it with credit and honor. He is a conservative business man, and will manage it upon a strict business basis. Then you owe it to your party to vindicate by your votes the vituperations heaped upon Captain C. E. McDonell, candidate for County Assessor, by the opposition. And so I might go on down the entire list of candidates on the Republican ticket and show you how thoroughly capable they are, one and all, that time does not permit. Remember, the great responsibility that rests upon you and next Monday vote the straight Republican ticket."

L. B. COX PRESIDED.

Hon. William Smith, of Baker City, Fusion nominee for Representative from the Second District, delivered one of his intemperate campaign speeches, as he termed it, at the Metropolitan theater last evening. The speaker was introduced by L. B. Cox, who said that he had been waited upon in the morning by a somewhat miscellaneous committee with the statement that they were in search of a pure and undefiled Democrat to preside over the meeting, and that he had been complimented by their choice. In accepting the position Mr. Cox did not want to be understood as endorsing all the vagaries which the room contained, but that he was led to act from the double motive of presenting a warm personal friend for whom he had the highest regard, and because he would thereby be afforded an opportunity of stating the position of himself and those Democrats who had acted with him politically for the past few years. He spoke of the pain and regret with which they had felt compelled to sever the strong ties of association with other members of their party, but said they had been actuated by a high sense of duty, and if a like condition of affairs should be again presented the same sense of duty would impel like action on their part.

But in his opinion circumstances were not now the same. The time for temporizing had passed, a broad line of demarcation had been drawn and any man who was conscious of the duties of citizenship was compelled to take a stand on one side or the other of this line. He could not believe that the men or the measures which now gave character to the Republican party were calculated to serve the best interests of the country, while refraining from any discussion of pending issues, he would simply announce that he would take his stand on the side of Democracy. Three times in the history of the Government had the Democratic party been called upon to meet great political issues. It had first given Thomas Jefferson, a generation later it gave Andrew Jackson, and now when these issues seemed even graver than ever before, destiny seemed to point to William J. Bryan as the man to meet the emergency.

With a brief personal reference to the character and standing of Mr. Smith, Mr. Cox presented him to the audience. Mr. Smith made a free reply, 16 to 1 speech. He announced himself to be a disciple of this cause from the ground up. If prosperity were here, he repeated several times, it had been brought about by political means, and such improvement could not be classed as permanent. He advocated a prosperity which would exist at all times, no matter what party was in power. He claimed McKinley had done exactly what Bryan would have accomplished by his election by increasing the Government indebtedness $400,000,000 and putting this amount of currency afloat. Secretary Gage was characterized as the head of an infamous coterie of money sharks, and the late currency bill a national disgrace.
