NOW FOR THE STREET FAIR

PREPARATIONS FOR CARIVAL GO ACTIVELY AHEAD.

Many Gain Days to Come Between September 4 and 15—Entertainments to Help.

The City Council having granted to the Portland Street Fair and Carnival Association the right to use Sixth street, from Burnside to Yamhill, and all intersecting streets, from Fourth to Seventh, preparations for the great carnival will now proceed with vigor. The fair is by no means too extensive. For a fair of magnitude, such as that of the proposed carnival in Portland, a great deal of street room will be required, and there is no doubt that it will be occupied by features of the 12 days' festivities.

The date of the fair has now been definitely settled. It will be held from September 4 to 15, inclusive, and the time will be crowded so full of entertainment that it will keep the thousands of visitors who will throng into the city moving at a lively rate to see it all. The Association has now a great deal of work before it, but everything has been perfectly systematized, so that each department has a committee to look out for it, and everything will be arranged without undue haste or carelessness. While the managers of the carnival want to do is to make it eclipse everything of the kind ever given, and if present indications are reliable, they will be eminently successful.

The members of the subcommittees for the management of the fair in all its departments were announced at the lodge meeting yesterday. Purple and white have been adopted as official colors, and a design agreed upon for the official button, which will be out next week. Envelopes advertising the fair are on sale, and merchants are laying in heavy stocks of them, intending by this means to let all the correspondents of Portland business houses know that Portland is going to have a big street fair this fall.

Architects are now busy with the designs of booths, arches, buildings and other structures, which will adorn the streets, and many handsome designs have been submitted to the committee.

Many plans to assist the management of the fair to raise funds for various benches of the fair have been adopted by friends of the Elks. The Acme Dramatic Club will give an entertainment at Cordray's the evening of Wednesday, July 11. A bright comedy-drama will be presented at popular prices, and the proceeds will go entirely to the fair. Two little girls, Carrie Harris and Bessie Kelly, daughters of Elks, are arranging a juvenile entertainment, to be given in Elks' Hall, Wednesday afternoon. The programme to consist of fancy dances, cake-walks, songs, etc.

All commercial travelers, whether Elks or not, are invited to meet the executive committee at headquarters, Imperial Hotel building, at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon for the purpose of discussing the advancement of the fair throughout the state. It is hoped that every knight of the grip in the city will attend the meeting.

he said, "until they struck a state where no one worries over the probability of crop failures, and where the deep, rich foliage of fruit and shade tree bespoken bounty and ease to the lucky dwellers in the pretty villages or cosy farmhouses, with their backgrounds of rich meadow or waving grain fields."

College Dormitory.
Dr. Charles C. Poling, president of the United College at Dallas, of the United Evangelical Church, was on the East side, yesterday, to conduct the funeral of the late Captain J. W. Kern. He stated that good progress is making on the new college dormitory at Dallas, and that it will be completed in time for Fall opening. It is 30x50 feet, three-story, and will provide quarters for 50 or more students. Dr. Poling was largely instrumental in bringing about the consolidation of the two institutions into one.

SUSPENDS HIS OPINION.
Portland Expert Not Ready to Pass Judgment on Nome.

L. B. Hammond, of Portland, who took an extensive dredging plant to Nome, has written a letter to a friend in this city, under date of June 11, in which he says he had just succeeded in landing his plant, but had not yet decided at what point to put it in operation. The dredge was built to work well out toward the sea, at low tide, and a good deal would depend upon whether gold could be found in paying quantities at that distance from dry land. He found the beach in the vicinity of Nome studded thickly with miners' rockers, and men were working the same ground over for the second or third time.

"There is lots of gold dust in sight around the business quarters of Nome," he says, "but there are lots of people, too. One drawback to the country is that big companies have monopolized a large amount of territory, by power of attorney, and they have imported men to back up their claims by force of arms." He would not be able to pass judgment for a few weeks yet on Nome as a modern Golconda or a very ordinary mining country.

SAW "GOD'S COUNTRY"

People From Parched California Enthusiastic Over Oregon.

W. S. Ford, formerly of Portland, has returned from California, as advance agent of Edward Earle, the great psychic, who is billed for the Metropolitan Theater. He does not conceal his satisfaction at getting back into emerald Oregon after several months of roasting in the hot, dry valleys of the Golden State. "On coming up over the Southern Pacific," he said at the Perkins yesterday, "I went to sleep amid the heat from the parched and dusty fields of California, and awoke among the green hills and smiling fields of Oregon, and I tell you I was glad. Oregonians don't know how bountifully they are blessed until they strike out beyond the borders of their state, and then they begin to realize it. Oregon hereafter is good enough for me."

He says several Californians accompanied him on the train, and that Oregon is a revelation to them. "They thought California was all the place there was,

HOME FROM THE CONVENTION

Wallace McCamant Confident of Republican Victory.

Wallace McCamant, member of the Oregon delegation to the Republican National convention, has returned home. The delegates did not come back in a body. Some, including Mr. McCamant, visited different points in the country, and are just now getting back home. When seen last evening regarding the work of the convention, Mr. McCamant said:

"I note that The Oregonian stated in its convention report that I was expected to make one of the speeches seconding President McKinley's nomination. This is a mistake. I was not invited to make such a speech, never had any idea of doing so and was reluctant to vote for McKinley's renomination. I finally did vote for his renomination, inasmuch as no other name was submitted to the convention, and I thought no practical good could come from breaking the unanimity of the vote. I was, however, invited to make a speech in seconding the nomination of Governor Roosevelt for Vice-President. I was put on the program for this purpose chiefly that the convention might hear something about the recent Oregon election. The chairman of the convention, however, deemed that it was unwise to have so many speeches as were on the programme and requested me not to seek recognition, a request to which I acceded.

"The convention hall was magnificently decorated for the holding of such a gathering, and the members of the convention were magnificently entertained by the people of Philadelphia. For more courtesies were shown the delegates than were shown them at the convention four years ago in St. Louis.

"The two great features of the convention was the speeches of Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, the temporary chairman, and the extemporaneous address of Senator Depew. The former was the most complete and thorough exposition of the issues of the campaign which I have yet heard, and was the best speech of the kind which I have ever heard. The latter was on a par with all of Depew's speeches—witty, forceful and eloquent. I think both speeches were heartily appreciated by all who heard them. One of the Oregon delegates remarked to me at the close of Wolcott's speech that it was worth coming across the continent to hear such an effort.

"The Oregon delegation were all favorable to the nomination of Bartlett Tripp, of South Dakota, for Vice-President. Tripp and Roosevelt have been the closest of friends for a long period of years, and as soon as it appeared probable that Roosevelt would permit the use of his name, Tripp withdrew. The Oregon delegates had been full of enthusiasm for Roosevelt all of the time, and I personally, had been anxious to vote for him for President. We, therefore, very cheerfully joined in the general movement for his nomination for Vice-President. In my opinion the nomination of Roosevelt was the result of a groundswell of public opinion in his behalf. Quay and Platt grasped the situation at an earlier hour than did Hanna, but Hanna was finally led to see that Roosevelt's nomination was inevitable. It is not correct, in my opinion, to speak of his nomination as either a defeat or victory for the Administration forces in the convention. He was the hero of the hour and everybody was thinking of him.

"I feel very sanguine of the election of the Republican National ticket this year. I have been very agreeably surprised to see that a large number of Silver-Republicans in the mountain states are returning to their former allegiance. I spent a day in Idaho on my return from the convention, and saw something of several of the Idaho delegates while in Philadelphia. I think that the Republicans have excellent chances to carry Idaho, and I was assured by a couple of the delegates from Montana that Montana was reasonably sure for the Republican ticket. I am told that Kansas, South Dakota and Wyoming may be regarded as reasonably certain to cast their vote for McKinley, and, as is well known, there can be little doubt of the vote of the state of Washington. I hope that the time is near at hand when the West will become solid in support of the candidate and policy of the Republican party."

A Pointer for Rogers.

Senator Pettigrew has a happy faculty of being able to say either "follow Democrats" or "follow Populists." This might be a suggestion for Governor Rogers.
