DAILY METEOBOLOGICAL REPORT. OUT OF LUMBER CAMPS

RETURN OF MAINE WOODSHEN FROM WINTER'S WORK.

How the Penobsect River Log Crop is Bas vested-What the Woodsmen Receive.

Boston Herald.

. The picturesque woodsmen of Maine are now parading the strests of Bangor, clad in strange garb and jingling in their pockets the rewards of a long Winter of the hardest kind of work. Their coming to town has given an impetus to business and general gayety. The men who hire out in the Fail to chop logs, swimp roads or tend sleds in the woods need to have strength, first-class appetites and a happy disregard of numerous conveniences in the manner of living. They have to put up with the baked beans 21 times a week in the logging campa. The men who go into the woods at wayes ranging from 50 to $30 a month take the jobs not because they like them. but because in Winter time they can get nothing better. Years ago, when wages were much higher than now, most of the Penobscot logs were cut by Bangor men and residents of towns along the rivermen of family, who were among the most respectable of the laboring classes, and most of whom brought their wages, or a good part of the money, home. Nowadays the logging crews are made up of young first insertion. Each additional insertion, men of Bangor and other river towns, haif; no further discount under one month. and of men from the maritime provinces. few of whom are married, and still fewer of whom seem to know the value of the money that they earn by months of hard work in the woods. They "go in" along in November and December, and Begin to "come out" in March, the main body coming down to Bangor, where all hands are paid off in April.

It takes about 4500 men to harvest the Penobscot, River log crop, and a large proportion of these come to Bangor in the ring to get their pay and have a gool me. Many of them, after months of enforced sobriety, far from any settlement, seem to feel in duty bound when they reach Bangor to have a big spree. This annual spres to the loggers is not so gen-sral or so violent as formerly, the crews appearing to grow "tamer," as the police asy, every year; but while their money lasts they make Exchange street lively enough, in any year, and this is the harvest time for the saloon-keepers, the boarding-house keepers and the dealers in ready-made clothing.

Every day the trains from the north and east bring down scores of woodsmen, and the railroad stations are thronged with boarding-house runnors and drummers for clothing stores, and also the "bummers," who see in the return of the loggers bright prospects for unlimited liquid refreshments. It is an affecting welcome that this latter class extends to the woodsmen. The latter are assured that they are looking well, and that they are the best men who ever went up the west branch. The first thing the returnng woodsman wants is a drink, and when he drinks everybody in the house is counted in. The saloon-keeper sees to it that there are a good many in the house, for the more who drink the health of the loggers the larger will be his profits. The clothing store man generally gots the logger's ear before he has been long in town, and the result is that the logger is fitted out with a ready-made suit at a good price.

Then the boarding-house man has his turn, and, as he sells both victuals sna drink, he stands the best chance of getting the lion's share of the logger's wases For a few weeks the saloons will do a thriving business and the boarding-houses will resound with the songs of the woods-men-"John Ross," a stirring lyric descriptive of experiences at Sunc ok, and other ballads filled with the praises of woods heroes, all sung to rollicking airs and with an energy that disturbs the ers on the next block.

There is one song, "The Island Boys." which is dear to the hearts of the natives of Prince Edward Island, and this has been parodled by a local bailadist. When a native logger wishes to annoy the "P. E. Fs." as the islanders are called. he will tune up with the exasperating parody on their pet song, beginning:

"Oh, the boys of the island they feel discon-

For it's dull times at home and they can't make a cent; Bo mays Rory to Angus: 'Here we're doing no good, Let's go over to Bangor and work in the woods.'

The term "P. E. I's" is applied gener-ally to all men from the British prov-inces. They are big, strapping fellows, very good-natured, but they have always been held in contempt by the native log-gers because they have been the means of lowering the rate of wages on the Pe nobscot River Latterly these provincials have come to be known as the "Rorles" and the "Anguses,' because so many of them bear the name of Rory or Angus They are mostly of Scotch extraction, and are largely McDonalds, McDougalis, Mc-Intyres, McPhersons, Camerons, McPhees, McBeths and McIlroys.

This year the woodsmen have received about 20 per cent more pay than in 1895, but still, after deducting the "wangan" bill, they haven't a great deal left to show for their Winter's work. The wangan is a sort of supply store kept in every woods samp. The wangan keeper, who is generally the operator himself or a deputy, sells stockings, mittens, woolen shirts. moccasins, rubber boots and shoes, tobacco, playing cards and a lot of other things. The wangan prices are nearly as high as those prevailing in the Klondike The loggers have no money in the woods, and it is all a credit transaction.

In a few weeks most of the woodsme will have spent all their money, and will be looking for jobs on the log drives, where the season is shorter, and the work, although more hazardous, better paid. Every year some of the river drivers are drowned. It is more dangerous to drive logs in quick waters than it is to take part in some wars. The bodies of drowned drivers are buried along the banks of the river, with little wooden slabs or crosses to mark the graves. At one place on the west branch, called by the drivers "the boneyard," may be seen 40 little mounds. No hands care for these 40 little moun graves, but the wild flowers blossom over them and the wind sweeping through the dark pines sings for these unfortunates a ceaseless requiem.

Stevens' Originality.

Richard Harding Davis in Scribner's. The death of George W. Stevens was as hard and as difficult a problem. He had but only begin a career of brilliant and helpful work. It was work peculiarly his own. He borrowed no one's point of view, but by a marvelous instinct and intuition picked out in all he saw the essential, the dramatic, the human, and the humorous, and expressed it so that others saw it for themselves. His last letter shows how the slege filled him with boredom and ennul. In one of them he says: "Come quickly to our relief or we die-not of shells, but of duilness." I do not know that I can make it clear, but it seems in some way to add to the pathos of his end that it should have come to the man who went to Ehartoum with Kitchener, to Calcutta with Curson, and to Rennes with Dreyfus when he was longing to be up and doing-when all of those fine instincts and possibilities of perception and powers of expression were in rebellion at being kept idle, and were starving for the ac-tion, and incident, and color of which his hand was the master.
