TODAY'S WEATHER—Fair and continued warm; northerly winds.

PORTLAND, MONDAY, JULY 30, 1900.

OREGON'S CRIPPLE CREEK.

In another part of this paper will be found an exhaustive statement of recent development in the Bohemia mining district, together with an exposition of the geology of the region, by Professor Diller, of the United States Geological Survey...

It seems to be the fate of all Oregon mining camps to pass through four successive periods, which may be described as follows: First, discovery; second, obliteration; third, litigation and mismanagement...

Bohemia is unquestionably a base camp. Underlying the late volcanic covering of free gold, at depths varying from 300 to 600 feet, are enormous bodies of base ore, carrying high values in gold, copper, lead, silver and galena...

MORE ATROCITIES OF CHRISTEN- DOM.

The subdivided record, published by the Lancel, and extracted from the archives of old Paris—the Paris of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the Paris of Louis XI, of Francis I, of Catherine de Medicis and Charles IX; the Paris that was contemporaneous with the London of Edward IV, Henry VIII and Queen Elizabeth—reveals a capacity for cruelty on part of the Christian governments of France quite equal to that of heathen China.

AN EXECUTIONER'S PRICE LIST.

Table listing prices for various execution services: To killing a man in a public place, To hanging a man, etc.

As late as 1777, Damens, after undergoing horrible tortures with red-hot irons for weeks, was bound to a post; then a horse was fastened to each limb and the horses lashed until he was dismembered...

China, either in its legal code or in the humanity of its mobs. The fact is, there is a lurking devil of animal ferocity in all races, and when the sunny rays of our Christian civilization are inhibited in most, today, it is about as repulsive as that of heathen Asia.

SENSE FROM NEW HAVEN.

In admitting President Hadley, of Yale, to its August pages, the Atlantic Monthly has returned to a course of sense and reason, widely deviated from in recent numbers by the misplaced sentiment of Nelson, Sedgwick and Moody. President Hadley writes about "Political Education" as a practical undertaking, but the law of his being compels enunciation of certain principles that are hostile to and exclusive of all the fanciful notions of anti-imperialism.

Nothing could be more diametrically opposite to the fundamental idea underlying anti-imperialism. That idea is that self-government is a boon to be vouchsafed, a gift to be bestowed, of the same nature as a present found in the stocking of a Christmas morning, or a prize that falls out of a lottery wheel.

Nothing depends on him, but all on us. His exercise of the function of self-government is a matter of whim on our part, not of fitness or capacity on his. That is anti-imperialism's conception of self-government; but it is not President Hadley's. He knows that certain acquired qualities, among which is discipline, are prerequisite to the maintenance of free government, and without which it is impossible to save the state from destruction.

Perhaps it is a pertinent question, What have the university men of the country, who know the Nation's history, been doing, that they have had no word of rebuke for all this sophisticated foolery of anti-imperialism? The history of the United States for 400 years is the story of slow and patient conquests.

Evolution has made a superficial veil of the electrical college, which marked a limitation on self-government approved in the eighteenth century. Perhaps we shall soon choose our Senators without intervention of the Legislature, but it is certain we cannot yet be trusted to elect our Federal Judges.

LABOR'S HARVEST TIME.

This is the harvest time of the year, not more for farmers than for workmen, skilled and unskilled. Any able-bodied man who desires work will find work to do at more than a living wage. That is to say, steady, honest labor is now in demand over a wide agricultural area, the harvest needs of which are pressing, at wages that will enable the worker, if at all prudent, to save money against the needs of the dull season, which comes with the stress of winter.

It is a common and just saying that no man has now an excuse or a shadow of an excuse for asking back-door charity. Equally just would be the statement that no man will have, during the coming winter, unless prolonged sickness overtake him, an excuse for being out of money and the common comforts of an abiding-place when money is otherwise homeless.

As late as 1777, Damens, after undergoing horrible tortures with red-hot irons for weeks, was bound to a post; then a horse was fastened to each limb and the horses lashed until he was dismembered...

well housed and fed all along, though perhaps wearing patched clothes, was exceedingly well to do, and literally had "mortgages to burn." Then the word was given to cut the grass, and the happy farmer, with his multitude that claimed public pity and the tears of the lachrymose politician with an ax to grind.

The plot of the idler, "No man hath ever used" excites honest indignation rather than weak pity at this juncture, since no man in the Pacific Northwest need be idle a day for the next two months at least, the simple fact being that there is work—good, wholesome and well-paid—for all who can and will work. This is not to say that to every idler the choice of light, genteel, lucrative occupation is offered. It is to say that the farmers of the wide area, presiding over the plow, have had to cut, thresh, sack and market their grain, and that for such labor they are willing to pay good wages.

A TYPICAL POPLIST AGITATOR.

C. B. Spehr, one of the editors of the Outlook, has been on a tour of inquiry and observation through the Middle West, and among many interesting experiences has had the opportunity of observing the operations of a populist agitator in the person of a Minnesota farmer who was an enthusiastic believer in Populism and a minister of an Episcopal Church.

The editor of the Outlook did not find this clerical Populist and his associates farmers of the same creed possessed of the belief that such an advance in the price of land over what the people of the United States had sold it for was suggestive of an "unearned increment." On the contrary, these profound political economists believed that the latter settlers ought to be taxed for the benefits which they have received from the earlier ones.

This Populist philosophy of public equity and economic justice looks like the case of a miser with a pocketful of money and a man with a pocketful of money and a man with a pocketful of money.

Furthermore, the editor of the Outlook found proof of the prosperity of these Populist prophets of coming woes in the dividends paid by the creameries the farmers have set up. When they were not denouncing trusts for raising prices, or cursing railroads for not lowering freights, they were setting up creameries without the investment of a dollar in cash, and making up the capital out of the profits of a single year's business.

THE MANCHU DYNASTY.

It comprises the Bourbons of China Who Resist All Progress. Mr. J. S. Tucker, of Washington, in an article in the New York Sun, notes the interesting coincidence that the Manchu dynasty in China owes its origin in part to the murder of an Ambassador in 1618.

Since the conquest of China, nearly 300 years ago, the Manchus have been a constant and a bad influence on the Chinese. The principal cities are garrisoned by Manchu regiments, in which no Chinese are allowed to serve. On the other hand, the Manchus are regarded as a badge of dishonor.

to the ground to devour potatoes is an unusual act of the bothersome creature. Its appearance and operations, however, are governed somewhat by environment. Usually it is a winter flier, the caterpillar. It is probable that the damage done by them this year will be found not to be great, when their brief season is past. Their presence is more alarming than their work.

How the organ of anti-imperialism rises at a rumor of vandalism perpetrated by American troops? Owing to its acute self-knowledge and its intense patriotism, it immediately concludes the worst possible must be true. Here, for example, is the Baltimore Sun, raving over outrages depicted by the active and resourceful correspondents of yellow journalism.

No man deserved a peaceful death, of 40 years and honor, with children's faces around him, more truly than good old Humbert, whom some wanton miscreant's hand has just removed from among a loyal and affectionate people. A gallant soldier for his country's independence at 15, a division commander at Custozza at 22, a just and generous Prince and King, this humane and heretofore heroic man has been one of the few remaining figures of ancient and honorable monarchy.

These despairing and agonized friends of the down-trodden Filipino are New York and Boston exiles, who, their heads bowed, sit about their beds in the fear of condemnation if they met a Filipino on the street. The tolling masses for whom they roll eyes and compose panegyrics they wouldn't admit to their office or the grillroom of their favorite club.

Where Bohemia district in Colorado or Washington, or anywhere except in Oregon, it would not suffer long for lack of a railroad service. Here we have a mineralized region as rich as Cripple Creek, but many times greater in extent, dependent for access to the world upon a long trail from Oakland and a tortuous mountain road from Cottage Grove, neither of which is adequate for large traffic.

The president of the National Wool-growers' Association is said to have Portland in mind as a good place for an annual meeting. The man is on the right track, but how the deuce did he ever hear there was such a place as Portland?

Some German voters will support McKinley, and others will support Bryan. That is, they will do as they like. No statesman or editor, however important in his own eyes, is going to lead them about by the nose.

The army worm, or cutworm, that has appeared in such numbers and done some damage west of the Cascade Mountains, has but a short life, and is an infrequent visitor. But for these facts, the situation would be alarming. Its ephemeral existence is marked by great activity and a voracious appetite, but it runs its course as a destructive pest in about two weeks, and is not likely to appear again for several years.

admission of any interference from the outside world. Although the Manchus are outsiders, they have raised the issue of "China for the Chinese." The recent efforts of European nations to secure parts of the territory of China were a declaration of war against the empire, in which they themselves were largely a foreign element. In order to retain the control which they won with the sword, the Manchus have now adopted a policy which has excluded them from China in the 19th century if the Chinese had been strong enough to enforce the doctrine.

A SOUTHERN EXPANSIONIST.

He is a Firm Believer in His Country's Great Destiny. Chief Justice Snodgrass, of Tennessee. The people of the United States, as we know them, are expansionists at heart. They believe it the duty of the Government to take advantage of every opportunity which offers for the acquisition of desirable additional territory.

The acquisition of Louisiana was a mistake. The acquisition of Texas and California was a mistake. The acquisition of Hawaii, Porto Rico and Guam, was a mistake. The acquisition of Alaska was a mistake. The acquisition of the Philippines was a mistake.

The people of the United States today are and have been in past years looking for additional territory. In 1890, when the Indians of Oklahoma were being removed to a smaller reservation and their former lands thrown open to settlement, no sooner had President Harrison issued his proclamation opening the reservation than people began flocking there from all directions.

Along about 1870 the people on the western coast began to turn their attention to the Hawaiian Islands, then inhabited by a few natives. Within 20 years our people were flocking to the islands. The result was that in 1892, when Hawaii applied for annexation to the United States, the application came largely from our own citizens who were then in the ascendancy, commercially, if not in numbers.

Militarism in Two Nations. St. Paul Pioneer-Press. "Germany's government," says the St. Louis Republic, "is the first of all military governments, and its army is the most powerful of any in the world."

It's no longer a question of whether or not we will win out. The Democrats declare that they will win out. The Republicans are arguing worse than they did before. The army officer lords it over not only the wage-earner but the employer of labor.

Practical Western Germans. The fear of imperialism does not appear to affect the Germans of the Mississippi Valley as the Bryanites at Kansas City expected. Dr. Emil Pretorius, editor of the Westliche Post, an influential newspaper of St. Louis, persists in adhering to the financial question as the most important one of the day.

Hugo Muench, a son of a refugee of 1848; Dr. R. M. Starkoff, Mr. Charles Nagel, Judge G. E. Fickelburg, and Judge Leo Rauser, some of them German birth. All of them dwell upon the threat to financial stability that would be implied in the successful election of Bryan.

CANNOT ENDURE BRYANISM.

Democratic and Independent Papers Oppose Financial Dishonesty. Seattle Post-Intelligencer. The following list of Democratic and Independent papers that have announced themselves as opposed to Bryan and the Democratic Presidential ticket:

- Baltimore Sun, Boston Herald, Brooklyn Eagle, Baltimore News, Pittsburg Leader, Richmond Times, New York Times, Nashville Banner, Detroit Free Press, Philadelphia Times, Pittsburg Dispatch, Chattanooga Times, Philadelphia Record, Worcester (Mass.) Post, Galveston (Texas) News, St. Paul (Minn.) Globe, Greenville (S. C.) News, Hartford (Conn.) Times, Burlington (Vt.) Times, Raleigh (N. C.) Observer, Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, New Haven (Conn.) Union, Fall River (Mass.) Herald, Green Bay (Wis.) Daily, New Haven (Conn.) Register, Denver (Colo.) Times—Silver Republican; for Bryan in 1896.

MEN AND WOMEN.

Pol Flanson, the opera singer, sings a whole opera in admirable German without understanding a word of that language. J. Pierpont Morgan, while a student at the University of Wisconsin, took the mathematics prize in 1872.

One of the first Englishmen to appreciate Stephen Crane's literary work was George Wither, the present Under-Secretary of State. He is a devotee of "The Red Badge of Courage" upon its appearance in England.

Portlander who has just returned from a visit to his old home away down East tells a story about going fishing. The villagers have a weir or set net supported on stakes, which is a sort of community affair, and as the tide goes out the boys get down to their boats to gather the fish enclosed.

PLEASANTRIES OF PARAGRAPHERS.

How She Looked to Him—First Artist—Why do you call that a study in still life? Second Artist—Why, that's the horse I bet on at the last Suburban—Pack.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

Bryan continues to say nothing in long-winded speeches. The patriotic servant girls continue to wreak vengeance on China.

The man who sent out that Shark dispatch is evidently practicing for a job as Chinese war correspondent. Now is the time for some philanthropic gentleman to come forward with a tract on the "unoffending Chinese."

The rich man may not stand any chance to get into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he can take a Summer vacation once in a while. New England has the record for the first accident on the golf links. There is bound to be a good deal of hazard about playing golf.

Missionaries who are thirsting for an opportunity to die on the field of duty need not go to the expense of a voyage to China—New Orleans is handler. History furnishes no more striking example of punishment to fit the crime than the case of the bicycle scorcher who was devoured by a Honolulu shark.

Chairman Jones opines that there is victory in the air; but Bryan demonstrated last year that there was no victory in the air, even when the air took the form of wind. Cremation is undoubtedly gaining favor. There are thousands of people in Portland who are anxious to postpone dying till after the establishment of a crematory.

A citizen who is out in the mountains fishing writes to say that he saw a paragraph copied in the Oregonian not long ago attributing superior intelligence to cattle on the Mississippi bottoms, because they stand in the smoke of "smudges" to protect themselves from mosquitoes.

A man passing along Third Street yesterday with a morocco case under his arm was met by an inquisitive friend, who asked him what he was doing with a case of mathematical instruments on Sunday. He replied that it was not a case of instruments he had, but a Claude Lorraine mirror. This was a poser for the inquisitive friend, who had never heard of such a mirror, and he asked for an explanation.
