PAUL VS. JEFFERSON.

Well Being of the Governed the ## Justification of Baie.

A. J. McKelway in Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C. he one declaration which we borrowed from the French phrasemakers, and dropped as a parenthesis into our Dec-laration of Independence-that all gov-ernments instituted among men derive ir just powers from the consent of the immediate occasion for the reference to the Deciaration is the breaking down of the theory in the Philippines. The independent pointed out some time ago that it was difficult to state the case for the American policy in the Hawallan Islands so as not to include the South-ern policy toward the negro race. But compared with the "consent of the gov-erned" Filipinos, the reluctance of the erned" Filipinos, the reluctance of the Hawaiians to accept the rule of a white minority becomes a wild, tumultuous longing for that rule. We have always been included to think that there was too much of the ilberty, equality and traternity doctrines of infidel France in Mr. Jefferson's famous declara-tion. It was hardly worth while to as-sert, in proving the proposition that an tion. It was mirely worth while to as-sert. In proving the proposition that an American was as good as an Englishman, that "all men are created equal." Equal, how? Has any one ever explained? And in suying that the colonies were caple in a full sufferencement it was needless self-government it was needless add that all government derived its just power from the consent of the gov nt rests upon the strength of the ruler rather than upon the consent of the ruled. The New Testament conception of the civil maginization is of one that beareth not the sword in vain. In primitive conditions of society, strength meant brute strongeth. The strongest prevalled over those weaker than himself. The King is one who can. As society be-came more complex, intellect dethraned muscular strength. But the strongest orce is that of character, and the is mearing. If it is not already here, when the rulers of the popple are to be those who by renson of their nobility of char-acter are fittest to rule. Government will then be concerned more for the good of the governed than about their consent. Suffrage is not a natural right. Government is not an end in itself but a to an end. The end is the wellbeing of society so far as government can achieve that end. But men do not all understand what their well-being is. If the government itself is an instrument for efeating its own end, there is a reversion at once to first principles and there is a revolution, penceable or otherwise, as the case may be. It is the office of government to pre-cut and to punish crime. In one of our North Carolina cities not long ago it was the work of the city government to fos-ter crime and protect the criminals. Then came the Wilmington revolution. The New York City government is in partnership with crime, encouraging the com-mission of crime and deducting a com-mission from crime. A revolution is due New York. It depends upon who the governed are, whether their consent is es ential to just government, just as it de-bends upon who the rulers are, whether they have the capacity to rule.

This extract is from the Outlook. One of its aditors is Lyman Abbott. Lyman Abbott was the successor in Plymouth pulpit of Henry Ward Beecher. Henry Ward Beecher was the brother of Harriet Beecher Stowe. Times change and men change with them.

Government in our American commo wealth depends upon majority rule. That is an ideal principle for the ideal state where men are indeed equal in capacity. courage, in intelligence, in education in character. But we have not reached that ideal state. And so the mere nu-merical majority does not always rule and should not. The capacity and char-acter of a people will take command sooner or later, and as surely as there is power that makes for righteonances, over the victous and ignorunt though they be in the majority. And if the unlimited exercise of the suffrage is not expedient for the securing of a just and beneficent government, the danger of it will be re-moved by its limitation, forcibly, fraud-ulently, or under just and righteous law.

And what has become of the "consent of the governed?" Government really derives its just powers from the well-being of the governed, and not from their con-sent. And if it is said that this is the oply that tyrants always make, and that they consider themselves the best judges of the well-being of their subjects, the answer is that it is the reply which his-tory makes in a thousand examples of Just and benish rule over man by men. The Chinese will hardly consent to a European or American protectorate over that wast empire. But it will be better for the Chinese to have a stable gov-
