Omnha's 8nd Experience

Chicago Tribune.

Omaha has now 190,555 inhabitants. In 1890 it was credited with 140,452. This apparent loss of 37,957 people in the decade is a sad blow for an ambitious city, The only way in which Omnha can break the force of that blow is to plead that the returns for 1200 were padded. That has been suspected. The real estate boom in that city collapsed in 1887 with serious consequences to its prosperity. It may well be that in order to create the impression that the consequences were not so serious the census enumerators were persuaded to amplify their figures. That was unnecessary, because in 1880 Omaha had only 20,516 inhabitants and would have made a good showing had it been credited with but 75,000 or 80,000 10 years later. Had that been done there would not have been this humiliating and unexampled slump in population. Distressed citizens of Omaha are insisting that the city must have at least 12,000 people, ac-cording to "the common rules for com-putation"—the number of school children etc. Their arguments and protestation position, the after effects of which may not have been good for the city. Al m to be pretty near the truth
