MAY SHOOT BIRDS TODAY

BEGINNING OF OPEN SEASON FOR PHEASANTS.

Many Hunters Are Already in the Field and Good Bags Are Expected.

Today the sportsmen of Oregon will be permitted to turn themselves loose on the pheasant and quail, and judging from the heavy business at the Portland gun stores Saturday, the birds will have to hunt cover in a lively manner.

It is estimated that fully 1000 gunners left the city by last evening for the various shooting resorts of the Willamette Valley and other points. Quite a number left Saturday evening with guns and dogs by various routes, but of course, these sportsmen will merely intrude their dogs to the birds, and the birds to the dogs, in a preliminary way, before the onslaught tomorrow.

WITH MILITARY HONORS.

Captain Jameson's Comrades Will Lay Him to Rest.

Captain Malcolm S. Jameson will be buried in Portland. His mother, Mrs. Jane Jameson, reached here late last evening and consented to interment where the deceased had practically made his home for the past 10 years. The regular military funeral, with all honors due a dead Captain, will be given. Services will be in Calvary Presbyterian Church, Tuesday, at 2 P. M. Rev. W. S. Gilbert officiating. Company G, the deceased's own company, representing the Guard, and perhaps Company B, Captain T. N. Dunbar, representing the Second Oregon, will consolidate to form the escort, as a Captain is entitled to but one company. The services will be under the auspices of the Third Regiment, O. N. G., of which Captain Jameson was a member at the time of his death.

NO OBJECTION TO SHEEP

COMMISSIONER HERMANN THINKS THEY DO NOT HARM RESERVES.

How 5,000,000 Acres of Forest in Oregon is Cared For by the Government.

Hon. Binger Hermann left last night for Tacoma, where he is booked for a campaign speech. From the Puget Sound region he will go through Idaho for the purpose of addressing the citizens on the political issues of the day.

AFTER THIRTY YEARS.

Murder Story Finds William Layfield

James Layfield has got trace of his brother, William Layfield, whom he has not seen for 30 years, through reading an Oregonian account of the Lunrun murder case. James Layfield walked into the police station Saturday evening, and said: "Is Bill Layfield here as a witness in the Lunrun case?" He was informed that he might find Layfield at the County Jail. "I am anxious to see him tonight," said he, "not having seen him for 30 years. We were brothers together, but I left Portland, and during that time I heard Bill was dead. I have been back in Portland three years, and am working for a truck company. Saturday morning I read the account of the Lunrun murder, and saw that Bill was a principal witness. During the three years I have been back in Portland I had not heard a word before of him, and believed him dead."

Blackburn is Right.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

"The Goebel law," said the Senator, "is the most odious law ever placed on the statute book of Kentucky. It placed authority in a partisan commission of three men to inquire into the rights of a minority party. What Senator? Must have been Deboe, of Kentucky. No; it was ex-Senator Joseph Clay Stiles Blackburn, the man who a year ago, in the Goebel law, and if enough Democrats can be found in the Legislature having yet decent regard for public opinion, the Republicans will join with them in substituting for it a fair law for the people."

MADE MONEY AT NOME.

Benton County Farmer Glad He Went There.

Willis Vidito, a Benton County farmer, who went to Nome with a party of six last May, was at the St. Johns, Ore., yesterday on his return. He flattered himself that he was getting back with more money than he started with, although he by no means made his fortune up there.

Disfranchisement of Blacks.

PORTLAND, Oct. 1. (To the Editor.)—Will you please state through the columns of your paper in what states the colored people are disfranchised? When did it go into effect, and does it not conflict with the voting clause in the Constitution of the United States?

The vote of ignorant and propertyless blacks has been legally suppressed, as we understand, in Louisiana, North Carolina and Mississippi, and similar devices are in process of application in Virginia and Maryland. The Mississippi plan must be about three years old now; the Louisiana plan two years old, and the North Carolina plan was perfected in 1899. None of these state laws or constitutional amendments have been passed upon by the United States Supreme Court, as to their conflict or compliance with the Federal Constitution, except, if we remember right, that of Mississippi, and in that case a minor aspect, not the real controversy, was adjudged not in conflict with the Constitution. It is not accurate to speak in general terms of "disfranchisement of the blacks" for those who meet the educational and property qualifications laid down, vote, we understand, freely. The objection raised against the methods in vogue is, that some device, like the "grandfather clause" in North Carolina, is invoked to exempt ignorant and impudent whites from the restriction.

IN A PAUPER'S GRAVE

WELL-KNOWN THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES UNKNOWN.

His Identity Was Discovered Several Days After His Death—Exhumed and Buried Decently.

Twenty years a resident of Portland and yet buried as a total stranger, is the peculiar history of Samuel Requet. No one among the theatrical fraternity in Portland was not well acquainted with "Big Sam," and for that matter there is hardly a resident of Portland that has not seen and heard of this well-known character. But all this acquaintance, these long years of familiarity with fellow men did not insure for the late Samuel Requet recognition after death, until his body had lain in the grave several days.

But the obscurity of this demise was the result of singular circumstances, and not due to the indifference of friends. When friends heard Samuel Requet was dead and buried, they were so shocked they ordered his disinterment from a pauper's grave, purchased a lot in Lone Fir cemetery and yesterday buried him there with all proper ceremonies. They have endeavored to atone so far as possible by giving the remains that considerable attention that would be accorded any old-time resident of the city.

Requet began his career as a stage carpenter and mechanic in Portland 15 years ago. But two others remain now in Portland who were at this work with E. W. Quimby and H. B. McCabe, better known as "Penny." All three commenced about the same time, have worked together ever since, and the undertaker who is the only old stager in the business here. Quimby is engaged by Corday and "Penny" is at the Marquam. The old New Market Theater scene, at Corday's Washington street theater. For a time he was stage carpenter under George Baker at the Marquam. About a year and a half ago he was placed at the head of the street cleaning department when they began. Since starting there "Big Sam" has worked at Corday's old place, at the Marquam, and did his last work behind the scenes at Corday's Washington street theater. For a time he was stage carpenter under George Baker at the Marquam. About a year and a half ago he was placed at the head of the street cleaning department when they began. Since starting there "Big Sam" has worked at Corday's old place, at the Marquam, and did his last work behind the scenes at Corday's Washington street theater.

Nearly a month ago he registered at the old Globe Hotel, Front and Couch streets, under the name of S. Smith. Why he did this, and the sense of purpose is a mystery. Little work, over-indulgence, and the weakness of advancing age began to prove too much for his constitution. He became sick. As he was powerless the proprietor reported to the police that one S. Smith was at his place, destitute and needing medical attention. Before anything could be done for him he died. His body was taken to the morgue, an inquest held, witnesses called, a verdict returned, and yet not a soul recognized in Smith the well-known Requet. The coroner had the body embalmed and kept for several days, thinking some friend or relative might appear, but they did not and Requet was buried in a pauper's grave.

A stranger who stopped in the same house where Requet died had heard him speak his proper name and also mention the name of an intimate friend. After the death several days this stranger casually met the friend and referred to Requet's death. Supposing the death had occurred that day, the friend commenced preparations for a funeral service. Upon going to the undertaker he could learn nothing about Requet, but when the man Smith was described, concluded it must be the same person. Smith had already been buried. The friends went to the lodging-house and identified the clothes left by the deceased as those belonging to Requet.

For many years Requet belonged to the National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and also the Theatrical Mechanics' Union, but of late has allowed his membership to lapse. When it became apparent to friends and members of these unions that he had been buried in a pauper's grave, they had the body exhumed. Regular services were held yesterday morning at 11 o'clock in Holman's undertaking parlors. A large number of friends were present, besides the fellow workmen of the deceased. Several excellent floral pieces were contributed. An Episcopal minister read the service of the church, and then the body was placed in the grave, secured by friends in the Lone Fir cemetery.

Prospects for Big Exhibit at Pan-American Exposition.

"Prospects for a fine exhibit from Oregon at the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition of 1901 are good," said Samuel S. Wolfsohn, special commissioner of the exposition, who returned yesterday from a trip up the Valley.

Attitude of Legislators on the Oregon Exhibit.

"I have been interviewing the Senators and Representatives of the Legislature, wherever I could find them, and have called at all the newspapers in every town visited during the recent session of the Legislature. Governor Geer is quite actively interested in the matter, and I believe that an exhibit will be sent to Buffalo next year that will present Oregon in its right light to the East. The state had a fine exhibit at the Omaha Exposition and secured good results. There was a fine timber display, and Eastern capital has since bought a million acres of timber land in Oregon. But the fruit and mining industries of the state need further development and advertising in the East.

Cannot Be Made a Highway.

There has been some talk of the County Commissioners undertaking the work of clearing out the obstructions in the Sandy River so that the channel may be used to raft logs and railway ties down to Troutdale. This scheme has been looked into by the river, but those who are familiar with the character of the Sandy River do not think it is feasible. H. Cone, one of the owners of the sawmill at Troutdale, says that the river cannot be cleared so as to become a highway for logs. He says that he lost a great deal of money trying to use it in rafting logs down to his mill at Troutdale. The river is short and very swift. It has a way of becoming very suddenly a torrent that carries everything before it, and the best constructed booms at Troutdale will not hold the logs. Besides there are many obstructions in the miles on which the logs lodge and cannot be set adrift again. These logs can be seen on these bars by the hundreds from the banks of the river. The sandbars cannot be removed as they are there to stay. Loss in timber from this
