

The Oregonian.

Entered at the Postoffice at Portland, Oregon, as second-class matter.

TELEPHONE: Editorial Room... 106 | Business Office... 957

REVENUE SUBSCRIPTION RATES: By Mail (postage prepaid), in Advance...

United States, Canada and Mexico: 10 to 15-page paper...

Foreign rates double. News or discussion intended for publication in The Oregonian should be addressed to the Editor...

TODAY'S WEATHER—Partly cloudy and probably occasional rain; brisk westerly winds, decreasing in force.

PORTLAND, MONDAY, OCTOBER 29

BYRANISM TO DATE.

In his second Madison-Square speech and other addresses Saturday night at New York, the Democratic candidate sets out his position clearly and comprehensively.

"Imperialism." I believe that it is more important that we should have a republic than that we should have any particular money standard.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

is, on the contrary, that we went to Luzon, not to liberate the Filipino, but to strike at Spain, with which we were at war.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."

run to lose, according as the betting has proceeded, that racing "on the square" has been superseded by a far more complicated problem.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."

careers for any young man that broaches. Mr. Croker, after announcing, with characteristic violence, that "the young man of today hasn't any show," points to his own success in politics and in the betting-ring as the surest road to wealth.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."

Throughout the long discussion of the new responsibilities assumed by the United States in the Pacific, one point has stood clearly and distinctly: That this country has only followed other civilized states in the general movement to find outlets for surplus capital and the products of labor.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."

Throughout the long discussion of the new responsibilities assumed by the United States in the Pacific, one point has stood clearly and distinctly: That this country has only followed other civilized states in the general movement to find outlets for surplus capital and the products of labor.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."

Throughout the long discussion of the new responsibilities assumed by the United States in the Pacific, one point has stood clearly and distinctly: That this country has only followed other civilized states in the general movement to find outlets for surplus capital and the products of labor.

There are more opponents of creed revision within the Presbyterian church than those who are perfectly satisfied with the Westminster assembly.

This is one reason why the votes of the presbyteries are so hesitating and indecisive. Out of the 232 presbyteries in the Presbyterian church, 110 have taken action, with the following results:

For a supplemental creed, 30; for a substitute creed, 5; for revision and a supplemental creed, 10; for a dismissal of the whole subject, 33.

And yet your own President has imposed qualifications on Porto Rico that exclude 83 per cent of the population of that island.

This is Bryan's invariable answer to the charge that "consent" is not enforced in the South. The cases he cites are not parallel.

"Government by Injunction." In his discussion of the labor question, Mr. Bryan is content to repeat a threadbare and shameless falsehood: The Republican party does not today stand for any policy that goes to the advantage of the masses of the people.

"Appeal to Class Hatred." By the common people we mean those who are the producers, who contribute to the wealth of the nation and advance property.

"The Scripture reads 'landmark' instead of 'handmark'." The discrepancy is small, but important, for otherwise Mr. Bryan could not be justly accused of quoting his authorities correctly.

"Experience has taught us that the commands of the ancient Hebrew Scriptures cannot always be taken literally, or we should be involved in many absurdities and contradictions."

"His Remedies." But let us admit that even now, as heretofore, the poor are not rich. Let us admit that some dinner-palls are not as full as others, and that while some children are in school, others' parents are too poor to send them.

"A Crisis for the Fur." The London press correspondents of American journals see regularly reminders in their reports of the protests against American fur habits and their methods in England.

"The Democratic 'Tip.'" "Should for Bryan, but bet your money on McKinley." This is the "tip" in Democratic circles.

"A Clear Object Lesson." There is a marked difference between Senator Beveridge's advice to young men and Mr. Richard Croker's utterances on the same subject.

"The Ducks Are on the Wing." The nipping wind is whistling and the gray clouds scurry by.

"Pleasantries of Paragraphs." An Unjust Assumption—"You, you are terribly lazy."