The Karalte Jews. London Travel.

These Karaite Jews claim that their forefathers were among those carried away captive by Shalmaneser, and their distinguishing tenet is a strict adhesion to the letter of the written Scriptures. with utter disregard of the authority the oral law or tradition. They say they came to the Crimea in the fifth century before the Christian era, but I know of nothing authentic to substantiate this claim to extreme antiquity, though from inscriptions collected and examined by Firkovitch, a Russian Jew, there are incations that in the Crimea, at least, the Karaites may have flourished as ear-iy as the first half of the fourth century. In the cemetery we visited the grave of Firkovitch, who died in 1874. Another comb, on which I quite failed to recognize some of the Hebrew characters, was pointed out and assigned to the well-rounded age of 2000 years, and yet a third, upon which some professor was said to have treated, as the oldest of all. The cemetery at Enghchiseral is walled, shad-ed by oaks, cypresses and lofty trees, and was a spot so dear to the ancients that, according to Howorth, whenever the Khans wished to extort from the Jews a present, it was sufficient to threater them with the destruction of the trees for fuel or timber.
