COLLAMARINI IN "MIGNON" Her Singing Delighted a Packed House at Cordray's.

Great as she is in the character of Car-men and Azucena Collamarini, of the Boston Lyrica, convinced a packed house last night that the part of Mignon better enables her to display the full richness and power of her magnificent voice than either of the others, and her singing of the beautiful numbers of the opera was a reveistion and a treat. The part is entirely different from either the passion-ate cigarette girl or the wild gypsy, and in her thorough mastery of its dramatic difficulties Collamarini again proved her-self an actress as well as singer. Her playing of the waif whose fortunes and misfortunes compose the pathetic story around which the opera is woven was such as alternately to move to laughter and bring tears to the eyes of an audience who could not understand a word she sang, but who were almost as well able to interpret her gestures and the changing tones of her voice as if she had been singing in English. Her duet with Russo in the first act carned a double re-call, and the storms of appleuse which followed her every appearance could not but have convinced her that the friends she has made in Portland are friends for Both in the more passionate passages of jealousy and fear and in the melting love songs in which her expression is incomparable, her singing was without a flaw, and the wonderful range of her volce and the perfect control she has over it united to make her every note a delight. It is mafe to say that those who have missed "Mignon" last night have not seen the great singer in her most fasinating role.

Russo as Wilhelm Meister, is fully equal Russo as Wilhelm Meister, is fully equal to the heavy work imposed upon him, and his singing left nothing to be wished for. In fact his voice has never been heard to better advantage than in the song "She is So Beautiful," in the second act, which was rendered with such effect that he was compelled to respond to an encore. Allesandroni in the part of the old minstrel has not the part he has in "Covered" but the full clove of his voice. "Carmen," but the full glory of his voice is heard in the last act, and in the scene with Collamarini and Russo be earns his full share of the honors.

The chorus same better last night than it has during the engagement, but more familiarity with the music of the operas which are new to the repertoire, will enable them to do better work. Colonel Thompson has carried the lasting gratitude of the music lovers of Portland by bringing three such singers to Cordray's. and the houses that have tested the capacity of the theater at every perform-ance prove that his enterprise has been rewarded.

At the matinee this afternoon "The I's Eye" will be the attraction, and engagement will close with "Wang" tonight, NAILED IT TO THE FLOOR. Stolen United States Bond Thus Concented From View.

A story of a stolen $500 United States Government bond, nailed to a floor and covered with carpet to hide its where-abouts, came to light yesterday, when Detectives Snow and Kerrigan arrested J. F. Clark and Edith Johnston, charged with robbing Charles Bush.

A few days ago, Bush, who lives on Fourth street, was a warm friend of Clark and the Johnston girl, who occupled rooms at Third and Jefferson streets. The trio exchanged visits, but Bush felt a sudden coolness toward his friends when he discovered that some one had entered his room during his absence and had stolen a Government bond for $500 and several articles of stothing. He told Clark that he suspected him, and Clark said: "You are a friend of ours no longer.

Bush did so, and informed the police. Chark and Edith were arrested, and they both said: "Why are we arrested? This is an outrage!" Finally, Clark confessed that he and his companion had taken the bond and natled it under the carpet of their room. Snow and Kerrigan visited the place and, sure enough, there was the bond natiled to the floor. Miss John-ston said she came from Montreal, Canada, and thought it was "real mean" of the police to arrest her.

TODAY THE LAST.

The poultry show closes today. It has been one of the most successful ever given on the Coast. Today will be the last opportunity to take it in. It is expected that a large number of school children will attend. The exhibit has proved a source of enjoyment and instruction to them, as well as to older ones.

CAPTIVATING SINGER

MLLE, DOLORES ACHIEVED A BRIL-LIANT TRIUMPH LAST NIGHT.

The Marquam Crowded With a Critical Audience, The Musical Club and Its Friends.

Antonia Dolores (Trebelli) conquered all searts in the big audience that assembled to greet her last night at the Marquam. The Musical Club, has always been pe-culturly fortunate in presenting to Port-land audiences artists of winning person-ality, as well as of exceptional musical gift; and Mile. Dolores proved to be an excellent illustration of this rule. Her frank sincerity of bearing, the mingling of grace and dignity in her stage pres-ence, together with a certain irresistible bonhomic could not fail to captivate even the severest critics. There is something wholesome and unaffected about her appearance that lends weight to the words she, uttens, and forces them home to the heart. Musically, she has the true Italian bel canto in extraordinary pur-ity. The luscious sweetness of her tones, their fluts-like clarity, cast a spell over her audience that was not removed until she had left the stage. It is indeed rare to find the flexibility of light soprano combined with the heavier qualities, vol-ume and dramatic intensity. She has all of these, together with a warm emotional temperament and a sensitive organization that enables her to interpret with extraordinary felicity composers of radically different schools.

Her programme was one of unusual interest and originality, embracing a great variety of nationalities and styles. For modern French daintiness and grace there were Chaminade and Delibes, with Gounod for more ambitious effort; German clas-sicism was represented by Handel, French gayety and mirth by Bibet, Italian dra-matic fervor by Verdi and Leoncavallo, Scandinavian tenderness and melancholy by Kjeruif, and its brighter moods by

of the most notable numbers was One of the most notable numbers was Kjerulf's "Oh, to Remember!" full of the most heartrending pathos. The plaintive, appealing beauty of the faint, half-breathed notes, each one perfect as a pearl, cannot soon be forgotten by those who heard it. In pleasant contrast to this was Grieg's joyous "Spring," full of vernal freshness and charm. Handel's "Let Me Wander Not Unseen" was not without a certain witching grace mingling with its classic dignity. The Balatella from "I Pagliacci" exhibited some of Mile. classic dignity. The Balatella from "I Pagliace!" exhibited some of Mile. Dolores' high notes to advantage, while Bizet's "Tarantelle" showed her unusual flexibility of voice. For breath and volume, Massenet's "Pensen d'Automne" was a notable number, while the saucy liveliness of the Page's song, "Voita la terra," from "Balle in Maschero," greatly pleased the avellence. the audience. As a colorature soprand she gave, incidentally, sufficient proof of her powers to show that she would be brilliantly effective if she cared to make a display of her technique; but this she never does, preferring always to subordi-nate it to its proper place in her art. In English, Italian and French, Mile. Dolores is equally at home, her enuncia-tion being faultless in each of these lan-guages. She is of French birth, her mother being Zelle Trebelli, the celebrated contraits, whose visit to this city in company with Ovide Musin will be re-mémbered by many Portlanders. Her perfect accord with the English spirit, perfect accord with the English spirit, however, was shown in the fetching humor and naivete with which she gave for encore the quaint little ditty. There Was Once a Little Boy. Heigh ho! This proved to be one of her most effective numbers so far as style and her remarkable powers of interpretation were concerned.

"A Circus Girl."

"A Circus Girl," which comes to the cosy Metropolitan Theater, next Sunday, January 13, and all week, is said to be had a right to remain where the people one of the brightest farce-comedies on the placed him until his term expired. He said he would go to the Legislature and fight any attempt to depose him from the office.

She appears in the title role, and is ably supported by the comedian, R. A. Graham, and a host of others, all equally clever actors, including Russell Bassett, William H. Dellman, Harry Sedley, J. O. Winters, Mat Wells and Annie Mitchel.

Isham's company of colored artists, which come to Cordray's Sunday and next week, have always stood at the head of all comedy companies, but this year Mr. Isham has outstripped every previous ef-fort by replacing on the boards a musical farce-comedy company of the highest or-der of excellence, filled with all the natoddities and wit of the real Southern folks. His new play, "King Rustus," by E. Henry Gurney, has a story of ludierous mistakes and entanglements that grows in lutense humor from beginning to end.

It is one continuous laugh.

The picturing of Southern character is in the hands of such artists as Smart and Williams. Mallory brothers and Brooks. Tom Brown, S. H. Dudley, the Brittons, Miss Eva LaRue. Marton Henry. "At the White Horse Tavern."

King & Norcross will present "At the White Horse Tavern" at the Marquam Monday and Tuesday. This comedy from the German, which has been well received by American theater-goers in all the cities visited, comes with indorsement of a high character. Unlike most German comedies, character. Unlike most German comedies, it is gaid that is passesses none of the forcical elements. It depends on logical and natural developments for its laughsdevelopments, however, that are described as surprising as they are amusing. The scene is in the Austrian Alps, in a little mountain inn, where love-sich tourists and the red-cheeked hostess take part in no less than four heart affairs. Besides, a lawsuit figures in the story, so that where laughter ends intense interest is said to begin, a somewhat unusual sequence in present-day comedies.

A tasty cushion of richly em-broidered eatin and a genuine china cup and saucer were also presented to the be-oved patroness. This mission school is situated in a residence district and is attended by the children from good bomes who are glad of the opportunity to learn the intricacles of sewing. A large amount of their handi-work was shown a reporter. It consisted of hemstitched handkerchiefs and all sorts of hemstitched handkerchiefs and all sorts of ornamental work, as well as of samples of the more essential articles. The children therefore obtain a free insight to the art of sewing which will be of use to them in after life.
