"A LADY OF QUALITY."

Miss Blair Warmly Welcomed at the Marquam.

Eugene Blair returned to the Marquam last night in her dramatization of Mrs. Burnett's play, "A Lady of Quality," and the warmth of her welcome showed that her old admirers have not forgotten her. While the book may have suffered somewhat in the dramatization, the play is still one of unusual strength, and affords Miss Blair an excellent opportunity for the emotional acting which is her forte. She rises splendidly to the many situations which have been provided for her, and her work in the scene in which madamed by the persecutions of her discarded lover, she kills him and conceals his body in the room where a few moments later she receives her guests, is particularly strong. The character of Cordelia Wildairs is one which is unique in fiction, and which might easily be overcome. But Miss Blair makes it strong without becoming masculine, and lends to it a beauty and dignity which would be beyond the powers of most of the women now starring.

With the exception of James Carew in the character of Sir John Oxon, the support is not all that it might be. Carew's playing of the craven blackguard who makes such an excellent foil for the masterful Cordelia is all that could be asked for. He makes love with the ardor and earnestness of a cavalier, he jeers with the fine scorn of a noble, and he works Cordelia into the rage that results in his death, with the brutal wiliness which instantly justifies the heroine in the eyes of the audience.

Frederic E. Duff as the Duke of Osmend was palatial and handsome, but he failed to make the character meet the conception of it formed by those who have read the book. Charles F. Keene was satisfactory as Sir Geoffrey Wildairs, Eleanor Montell made a pretty Lady Betty Tenthillion, and Katherine de Barry was sufficient as Anne. The play is magnificently staged and sumptuously costumed. The rose garden is one of the most beautiful scenes imaginable, and none of the others are lacking in any detail.

Miss Blair will repeat "A Lady of Quality" this afternoon. Tonight, "Carmen" will be the bill.

DOG ATTACKED HIS MASTER.

The vicious dog, owned by Julius Solom, of 48 East Eighth street, south, which had been a menace to the neighborhood for some time, was killed a few days ago. Several months ago the dog attacked Mr. Solom's son and bit him. Shortly afterwards the dog again jumped on the boy and tore his arm. Dr. Gillespie
