

MAY FIGHT THE LAW

Two County Commissioners Not Satisfied.

POSSIBILITY OF TWO BOARDS

One Member Is Waiting to See a Copy of the New Act—Discussion of Its Constitutionality.

Report is current that the present Board of County Commissioners, composed of W. B. Steele, J. G. Mack and William Showers, will resist the act passed by the recent Legislature restoring Judge C. C. Mack to his place on the board and deposing Mr. Steele on constitutional grounds. Mr. Steele several days ago made the statement that the Legislature had no power to remove him from office, that if he had done anything wrong he was responsible to the people of Multnomah County, and he otherwise intimated that he would not surrender the office, but intended to fight. The term for which Mr. Steele was elected does not expire until July, 1902, and he thinks he is entitled to serve his term out. By the law just enacted, Commissioner Mack's term is cut in two, and is made to end in July 1902, instead of July, 1904. Commissioner Showers is permitted to remain in office and complete his four years' term.

But this is not all; there is worse and more of it. The salary of the Commissioners, which is now $100 per month, is abolished, and by the law just enacted receive a per diem of $2. If there should be two meetings held each week, the Commissioners will receive $4 apiece, or $24 each a month. Occasionally an extra $2 may be earned by the Commissioners going out to view roads, and then again some weeks only one meeting may be held, or none at all. The meetings are to be held on the days of the week, and it is to be seen that all three of the present Commissioners are affected by the new law. Should the Commissioners as a whole determine to test the constitutionality of the new act, the result will be two courts engaged in the transaction of county business at one time. Judge C. C. Mack will call Commissioners Showers and Mack to meet with him and discuss county matters. If they decline and continue to meet as a separate Board of Commissioners as at the present time, Judge C. C. Mack will proceed to transact county business on his own hook, and then the question will be which orders the Clerk of the County Court will recognize. The new law goes into effect next Tuesday, March 12.

Commissioner Mack, when spoken to concerning the matter yesterday, said he did not know anything about it. He had not seen the new law, except a printed copy which had been sent him. He had heard the statement made that in one of the election bills a clause had been inserted at the last minute, placing the appointment of the judges and clerks of election solely in the hands of Judge C. C. Mack. Commissioner Showers was asked, "Going to have a new court next week?" and he answered, "I can't tell yet, I suppose pretty soon we will be running."

Some of the constitutional objections urged against the bill are that a County Commissioner is a constitutional officer, and consequently cannot be legally removed from office, within his term; that being a constitutional office and elective, the Commissioners cannot be named in the act; also that the law fixes no stated times of meetings, but says the County Judge, "may call meetings." "May," it is contended, means nothing.

If the law is unconstitutional it is asserted that the act passed two years ago creating a separate Board of County Commissioners, and naming Herbert C. Smith as a member to serve in place of Judge C. C. Mack, was unconstitutional.

Under the new law, it is said the saving will be considerable, being the salary of Commissioner Steele, $100 per month, and the difference between per diem and the salary formerly provided for the other two Commissioners. The room at the City Hall occupied by the Commissioners, the rent of which is $60 per month, may be vacated, and meetings held elsewhere in the County Courtroom.

Work on Morrison-Street Bridge. The work of repairing Morrison-street bridge is being pushed with all possible speed, and this forenoon the first two spans east of the draw will rest on the false work. These spans will then be moved back into correct position, when the damaged pier will be repaired. Foreman Richmond said yesterday he could not say when cars would be permitted to cross and that transfers will continue for the present. He said the cars may be allowed to cross after the piers are settled on the false work, if they do not interfere with the progress of repairs, the piers being to get the bridge in shape as Witty, Charming Mrs. Bronson's Death Will Be Much Mourned.

A cable from Florence announces the passing away of Katharine Cecile de Kay, widow of Arthur Bronson, and eldest daughter of the late Commodore George Coleman de Kay and of Janet Halleck, only daughter of Joseph Rodman Drake, all of New York. The death of Mrs. Arthur Bronson leaves a wide gap in the ranks of those who gave the welcome of an American home to travelers in Italy. Mrs. Bronson lived so long at Venice in the Casa Alviati, her modest home on the Grand Canal, opposite the Church of the Salute, that her memory will be always associated with the city of the lagoons. Here she dispensed a hospitality that became proverbial, not for any luxury connected with it, but for its quality of heart and brain. The wit and charm of the hostess were not reserved for her friends and those in letters and arts, such as John Ruskin, Robert Browning, Whistler, W. W. Story, Henry James, Mark Twain and their like, nor for those high in rank, such as Don Carlos, the Prince of Asturias, the Princesses Windischgratz, Metternich, Montenegro, Georgia, Odessalich, and others; but delighted just as much obscure artists and writers and those of her fellow-countrymen and countrywomen who had a letter of introduction from any one of her friends. More than that, the common people of Venice, the gondoliers on the canals, their wives and children, found her sympathetic and helpful. From the Syndaco to the beggar, no one in Venice but revered and was proud of her.

To the world at large she was best known as the person to whom Robert Browning dedicated his last volume of poems, his "Asolando." For many years the annual visit of Robert Browning and his sister, Miss Browning, to Venice began with a short stay in Casa Alviati. In Summer they would stay at "La Mura," in Asolo itself, Mrs. Bronson's retreat in hot weather; there Browning bought land and made arrangements for a villa just before he died. Mrs. Bronson told the story of these visits of the Brownings in the Century Magazine of last April, in an article called "Browning in Asolo." Browning, his sister and his son shared with her an admiration for the charming little town that looks toward Venice across the plain of Treviso, Bassano and Padua.

It would be long to chronicle the good deeds of Mrs. Bronson to the industries in the hospitals and wherever she found one of the little shrines erected by the ferrymen at the chief ferries across the watery streets of Venice falling into ruin, she had it restored, often placing valuable old carvings and pictures, and she had modern images had been. To the museum of Venice she gave very valuable articles, including an ancient marble well-known as an outstanding island. She aided the Countess Marcello to re-establish the lace industry on one of the minor islands of Venice and gave Dr. Salvetti, the inventor of the glass industry in the lagoons, many artistic designs which he was always eager to acknowledge as due to her cleverness and taste.

This granddaughter of Joseph Rodman Drake took readily to the pen at an early age. The late N. P. Willis was delighted to find that an anonymous writer of "Letters from New York" was no other than the brilliant and beautiful girl in her teens who was pleasing New York society with her quips and jollity. Neither her inclination nor her liking for the arts was shared by her husband, who was a life in Paris, London, Newport, R. I., Spain and Italy. She had but one child, her daughter, Countess de Casanova, of Florence, a naval officer, but her later years were not without the pleasure of grandsons and granddaughters. She was sister to the late Colonel Drake de Kay and Major Sidney de Kay, and two sisters, Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder and Miss Julia de Kay.

SEIZED OLEO STORED. What It Costs to Make "Bull Butter" at the Factory. The ton and a half of oleomargarine seized by State Food and Dairy Commissioner Bailey, at 364 Washington street, Saturday, has been stored in a warehouse, and will probably be released if the owners convince the prosecution that it will be shipped back to Kansas City, Mo., where it came from. As the product was received here before the new law went into effect, the owners will not be prosecuted. To show how cheaply oleomargarine can be made, in comparison with pure creamery butter, the following table has been prepared by the New York State Commission of Agriculture:

100 pounds of pure creamery butter, 100 lbs. $21.00
100 pounds of oleo, 100 lbs. $1.00
Cost of mixing, per 100 lbs. $1.00
Net cost at Chicago, per 100 lbs. $12.00

DETECTIVE JIM BARRY. Stricken with heart disease, James C. Barry, police detective, died suddenly in bed, at 6 o'clock, yesterday morning, at 630 Front street. For more than a year past, Barry had complained of heart trouble, and it was feared that he would have to resign. A few days ago, he was engaged in a friendly game of cards, and remarked: "Play ahead, boys. I don't think I will be among you much longer." He remained on duty all day Sunday, and worked as usual. Barry was born at Calais, Me., 45 years ago, and when a mere boy he went to sea, serving on merchant vessels and New Bedford whalers. In 1859 he came to the Pacific Coast and worked on steamers plying between San Francisco and Panama and Portland and the Golden Gate. The Fraser River mines claimed his attention in 1853, but he longed for the sea again, and he secured a berth as assistant engineer on a steamer between Portland and Victoria. In 1878, Sheriff Norden appointed Barry jailer at the County Jail, and a year later Johnston and Brown shot and killed a boy named Joseph, on Third street. When they were placed in the County Jail a mob marched to the gates, yelling: "Lynch Johnston and Brown." It was a dark night, and the attack was sudden, but Jailer Barry stood his ground, and threatened to shoot the first man who entered the jail. So resolute was his attitude that the mob melted away, and when Johnston and Brown were sentenced to be hanged, Barry knotted the ropes for the executioners.

In 1881, Barry was placed on the police force by Mayor D. P. Thompson, when J. H. Lappeus was Chief of Police. In 1885 he became a city detective, and six years later went out of office during a change in the city administration, but was taken back in 1892. At the commencement of Mayor Penney's rule, Barry was again one of the "outs," but secured his former position shortly afterwards. With regard to arrests, Barry had his share, and was not a violent and courageous officer. In 1881, he arrested Giannini for killing another Italian, near Castle Rock, Wash., and Giannini was convicted and sentenced to be hanged, but the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. In October, 1882, Barry was shot in the right arm by James Lewis, alias Robert Murdoch, just outside the City Jail. Lewis was wanted for burglary and the larceny of 1000 cigars, and Barry told Lewis, whom he met on the street, that he was "wanted." "Take that," said Lewis, suddenly, and fired. He got away at the time, but was afterward caught in California, and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment for shooting Barry.

In 1888, Barry arrested the notorious safe-blower, James Fagan, alias Bruce Creighton, and Fagan was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment. Three years later Barry arrested Thomas Wallace, a well-known burglar in his day. Of late years Barry has not been so active as of old, and he worked with Detectives Cordano and Ford. A short time ago, he said: "I'm to die soon, and I want Ford and Cordano to help to put me away." In politics, Barry was a Democrat, but was not a strict party man. He was reserved and unostentatious, and did not talk much except to friends of some years' standing. "Jim" Barry was a "square" man under any circumstances, fearless but cool-headed, never shirked a duty whatever the danger, naturally hated crooks of every description, and lived an upright life. In 1870, Barry married Miss Fannie Baker, and three children were born to them. The funeral will take place tomorrow.

NEW PURE FOOD LAW. Sale of Oleomargarine, Colored to Look Like Butter, Prohibited. Following is a synopsis of the principal new provisions of the pure food law, which was approved by the Governor, February 27, 1901. It forbids absolutely the sale of oleomargarine which has been colored to resemble butter. It provides that all rolls and packages of butter shall be stamped with their full weight, in pounds and ounces. All cheese must be labeled "full cream"

THE FREDERICKSBURG. The best free house in America, the Fredericksburg, has a good bill on this week. It has retained the phenomenal Little Nera, who has been one of the best attractions ever booked for the city. The sweet contralto, Hattie Ward; the female baritone, the Divine Edson; the trombone soloist, Sig. DeCaprio, late of the famous Italian Marine Band; the always favorite Mae Leonard, are still retained, and are still favorites. In "Tracy vs. Ross," are hottest four-round boxing bout ever shown in the city, the management is presenting a number which meets the unqualified approval of the audience. It is a vigorous and lively display, and meets with tremendous applause. Tommy Tracy, our local favorite, has a worthy competitor in Ross, and the four-round bout is full of vigor and vim. In Silvina, the king of magicians, the Fredericksburg this week scores a distinct triumph. His card tricks are marvelous. And the other features introduced by him are fresh and novel.

The central theme was that the thought of good men and women embodied in the leaflets, as sent out by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association, are "leaves for the healing of the moral disease in the country, as God's word is for the healing of spiritual disease." A lively programme followed. A brief historical sketch of the "Union Signal" was given by Mrs. Addison, National organizer. A unique exercise, called "Nuggets From Rich Scarcity," consisting of clippings from the Union Signal that showed the great scope of the paper. Mrs. M. A.
