WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY. Agricultural Department's System May Be Tried by the Navy. WASHINGTON, March 7.—Since last Autumn, the Navy Department has suspended the experiments in the employment of wireless telegraphy as a means of communication between naval vessels and between vessels and the shore. Up to this time none of the warships have been equipped with a permanent plant. Rear-Admiral Bradford, the Chief of the Equipment Bureau, has been in conference with some of the most eminent electricians in the United States as to the availability of the wireless telegraph for naval use, but so far nothing like the ideal system has been found. The latest proposition has been broached by the Department of Agriculture, Secretary Wilson, hearing that the Navy was casting about for a serviceable system of telegraphy, has written at once the Philippines to notify him that the Agricultural Department has been experimenting for some time with wireless telegraphy and has attained remarkable results. His experts assert with great positiveness that they have evolved a system radically different from Marconi's and of far greater efficiency. It is believed that within a short time an exhibit will be made on board of a naval vessel.
