SAVED THE MACHINERY.

Captain Spencer Was Lucky, as Usual, With Frederick Billings.

All that remains of the once elegant steamer Frederick Billings is the battered shell of a hull clinging to the rock on which sh+ split near Quinn's landing on the Columbia. Captain Spencer, who purchased the wreck at United States Marshal's sale a few weeks ugo, has just completed a highly successful job of removing the machinery. He secured the big new boller and engines in perfect con-dition, and, instead of making a failure of landing them, as was predicted, per-formed the task in much shorter time than was expected. In order to work to the best advantage, Captain Spencer built a scow 75 feet long and about 30 feet beam. He ran this scow up under the storn of the Billings, and slid every piece of machinery aboard of the craft over on to the scow without losing or breaking any of it. The cylinders were taken out first, and when the boller was ready to move it was jacked up on skids and rollers and slid down over the cylinder timbers and was safely aboard the barge in exactly 30 minutes after it started to move. The machinery is all lying at Quinn's Landing, and will be brought down to Portland by rail this week. Captain Spe will place the machinery in a powerful pat to be used in towing logs on B. C. the river. Work of construction on the new craft will be commenced in a few weeks.
