For Good Government.

Bird S. Coler in Everybody's Magazine. Three general specifications are essential to good city government. They are intelligence, honesty and simplicity, successfully manage the interests of a great municipal corporation the keenest intelligence is necessary. Conditions are constantly changing and new problems arising. The men charged with the re-sponsibility of administration must be able to think and act quickly and make few mistakes. They must, above things, be progressive, peering into the mists of the future for new landmarks and guide posts rather than lag irresolute among the unchangeable errors of yester-Without moral and political honesty, government becomes dangerous and corrupt. Honesty in the conduct of municipal affairs needs to be positive rather than negative. It must be of that sterling and energetic character that will render and compel faithful and loyal service. There are other ways of robbing a city than stealing money from its treasury. It may be robbed by careless and acompetent work. It may be robbed and permanently injured by inferior skill; and the honest and capable public officer is the one who guards the interests of the people at every point.
