DISCHARGED "FOR CAUSE"

PORTLAND STREET RAILWAY MEN FORM A UNION.

Motorman Gilliland, Who Was Elected President, Let Out—Smoldering State of Affairs.

The formation of a branch of the Amalgamated Street Railway Men's Union by the employees of the Portland Street Railway Company, and the discharge, Tuesday evening, of the president of the union, Robert O. Gilliland, has brought about an acute condition in the relations of a street-car company with its employees. Yesterday, there were many evidences of a smoldering state of affairs, when the men learned that the president, also one of the most popular men on the railway, had received his discharge. On the part of the men interviewed, it was the general opinion that the action the company was taken solely as a means of testing the union's strength, and to show the union that the company would resent any interference in its affairs. At the office of the company, although a reporter was denied a formal interview on the subject of the discharge, a general denial was made that Gilliland's connection with the union had anything whatever to do with it. "The discharge was made for cause," said Manager Fuller.

The following statement of the formation of the union and the discharge of Gilliland was given by one of the employees of the company, who, through months of policy, naturally desired his name withheld from publication: "Three weeks ago, the East Side Railway Company tried to induce its men to put up bonds. They resisted this, formed a union and resisted the demands of the company. As a result of their united action, they won out, and the company relinquished its bonding scheme. At that time, the matter was frequently discussed by the employees of the Portland Street Railway Company, and it was thought that our company might try to work the same thing through on us. The men rose en masse at the idea, and said: 'We will form a union, too.' Two weeks ago, 100 of the company's employees met, and, after discussing the matter thoroughly, pledged themselves to join a union if one was formed. The men were agreed that they had no cause for a grievance against the company, and the strongest arguments urged for the formation of the union was the social enjoyment it would afford to the men in meeting together. It was the plan also for the union to form an auxiliary of the wives and daughters of the men, and thus to increase the social advantages of the organization. "The question of forming a local union or securing a charter of the Amalgamated Street Railway Men's Union was also thoroughly discussed. It was urged that a local union was never effective, and that joining a strong organization allied to the American Federated Trades would give us greater strength. So this was decided upon.

"Last Saturday there was a meeting, and officers were elected and the constitution adopted. Under this none of the men could be called out on a sympathetic strike, and at no time whatsoever, except on account of a grievance of their own. There was no feeling of ill will manifested against the company, and no one contended that the men were not exceedingly well treated by the officers of the company. The object of the union, more than anything else, was to have a good social time. "Before Saturday night, the men were called into the office, one by one, and told by Mr. Fuller that the company did not like the idea of a union; that if the men were determined to form a union, that there was not so much objection to a local union, but that the company did not like the Amalgamated Street Railway Men's Union.

"Yesterday, as I understand it, Gilliland was dismissed from the service of the company because of a claim that he was not working for the best interest of the company, and had too much influence with the men. Now this seems to me rather a flimsy reason on account of which to dismiss a man like Gilliland, who has served the company as a motorman for 19 years without losing it a nickel on account of accidents. Taking this into consideration, that he was a faithful employee, and considered by the men the best motorman on the road, and the additional fact that he is president of the union, what conclusion can you draw but that his position at the head of the union had something to do with it?"

At the office of the general manager of the company a reporter endeavored to get a statement from Manager Fuller as to the cause of the discharge and the attitude of the company toward the union. Mr. Fuller would make no official statement for publication, other than that Gilliland and two other men discharged at the same time had been removed for "cause." "What the outcome of the matter will be is difficult to forecast. Some of the men are talking strike, others a petition to reinstate Gilliland. It is certain, however, that the matter will be discussed and official action taken by the union.

PREPARING FOR CARNIVAL.

First Meeting of Committee in Charge of This Year's Fair.
That Portland will have a big carnival in the Fall of 1901 has been definitely settled, but the site to be selected is still an open question. At the meeting of the committee held at the Commercial Club rooms last evening, some members favored the park blocks, others the old Exposition building, and others a 20-acre tract on the East Side, between East Burnside street and Holladay avenue, extending from the river front to Union avenue. A temporary organization being effected, the following named gentlemen were officially announced as members of the carnival committee: General O. Summers, chairman; C. H. Markham, A. H. Devers, D. Marshall, Ben Selling, E. C. Johnson, Captain E. S. Edwards, Dom J. Zan, I. N. Fleischer, secretary; J. D. Mann, W. H. Hurlbert, H. C. Campbell and A. B. Steinbach. The chairman appointed the following members as a committee to submit plans or organization at the next meeting, to be held at the same place, next Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock: J. P. Marshall, H. C. Wortman, A. H. Devers, F. Lynn and Julius Meier. The committee to report available sites for the carnival is composed of Messrs. Ramsdell, Batchelder, Campbell, Cordray

There will also be several boxing contests. The entries in each class are as follows: Featherweights, (115 to 125 pounds)—Salo Smith, Chester Hughes, Carl Mason, C. B. Haynes, K. Montague, C. G.
