HO FOR MOUNT HOOD!

ABOUT 150 PEOPLE CAMPED ON THE ROAD LAST NIGHT.

Three Distinguished Scientists Are in the Mazama Party and Will Climb to the Top.

SALMON P. O., July 12, 6 P. M.—The first stopping place of the Mazama excursion was reached this evening. The start was made from the end of the East Ankeny street car line about 3:30 A. M. About 40 of the party were in wagons provided by the Mazamas. All day long the Base Line road was dotted with teams and bicycles. The different parties straggled along, the advance guard reaching Salmon P. O., where camp was made for the night. Tomorrow the advance will be made to Camp Mazama, on the timber line. Over 150 people are camped this evening along the road.

Among the prominent people in the party are several noted scientists, Henry Gannett, United States geographer, and Professor Henry Fielding Reid, of Johns Hopkins University. Mr. Gannett was a member of the Harriman scientific expedition to Alaska. Mr. Reid is a noted glacial expert, who has been studying glacial movements in the Swiss Alps three years. He will make a study of Mount Hood, later Rainier and Mount Baker. One of the most genial members of the party is Charles H. Ames, of Boston, a member of the Appalachian Club, with an extensive mountain-climbing experience. Judge M. C. George is one of the most picturesque members, driving a single rig, and clad in typical mountaineer costume.

Those who started today in the Mazama teams are as follows:

follow his card, "go ahead and have it taken out."

Just then a man passed to whom the two thieves nodded, but who took no notice of them. Later he returned and informed Mr. Cohn that the pair were no longer in the city. It was ascertained by inquiring around among cigar dealers that several of them had been done up by these fellows, one of them having been worked twice, and being out 200 cigars. It is supposed that the machine was fixed by the use of a wire. Cigar men and others will do well to look out for this tall man and short man. They were here a year or so ago and worked the same trick at that time.

FISH GIVEN TO CHARITY.

Captain White Takes Novel Way of Getting Even With Dealers.

Portland charitable institutions will profit from the disagreement between Captain C. F. White, of the schooner Jessie, with local fish dealers over the disposal of 25,000 pounds of halibut and 8000 pounds of black cod. Being unable to get what he considers a fair price for his cargo of fish, and believing that a "job" has been put up on him by fish dealers here and in Seattle, Captain White announced last night that he would, by direction of the managing owner of the Jessie, donate to the Children's Home, the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, the Patton Home, the Florence Crittenton Home, the House of Mercy and the Home for the Aged.

The institutions which will profit as the result of Captain White's generosity are the Good Samaritan Hospital, St. Vincent's Hospital, the Children's Home, the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, the Patton Home, the Florence Crittenton Home, the House of Mercy and the Home for the Aged.

The story of Captain White's quarrel with the fish dealers has already been told in The Oregonian. He came here with the understanding that he was to dispose of his cargo to wholesale dealers. They offered him only a cent a pound for the fish, and when he attempted to wholesale them himself the dealers served notice on the retailers that if they bought from the Jessie's captain they could not buy fish from the wholesalers when the Jessie was not here. Captain White, who has been selling the fish at retail himself at a price away under that charged by other retailers in the city, and now proposes to facilitate his disposal of the fish by giving away an immense quantity.

ED. LYONS' PASS.

It Has 98 Years to Run and He Wants to Cash In.

Fifteen years ago, when this city and most of its inhabitants were youngsters, they are now, and many of them "better bred," Ed Lyons, manager of the North Pacific Terminal Company, was manager of a baseball nine, which played on the East Side, and James Lettan was operating a ferry across the river from the foot of Stark street. Lyons, having occasion to cross the river frequently, applied to Lettan for a pass on his ferry and was given one on a leaf from a memorandum book, as follows:

"Stark-Street Ferry. Pass Ed Lyons, Good till 1906."

There never was anything small about Lettan, and whether the pass ran 15 years or 115 was a matter of indifference to him. Time, however, changes all things, and several years ago the Stark-street ferry suspended operations. A day or two ago the pass was returned to Lettan with the following note:

"Mr. James Lettan: This was issued in '88, but as the ferry later went out of business, I think you should refund my money."

E. LYONS.

Lettan has been trying to figure out how much is due Lyons, for the transportation he might have used between the time the ferry went out of business and 1909, and several members of his club are also working on the problem, but have not yet been able to solve it. In the meantime Lyons is lying on his oars and imagines that he is to receive a pension till 1909.

descent, about 15 miles from the base of Mount Adams, but the mountain looks as if it were only three or four miles distant. The lake covers only about 60 acres, and the general depth is three or four feet, the bottom being covered with a dense growth of aquatic moss, in which the trout hide and find plenty of insect food. The lake was alive with trout while Benson and Farrell were there, continuing to jump all over the surface, till it looked as if a rain of trout was falling, but nary a trout would bite. They were tried at all hours of the day and night, in calm and windy weather, with all kinds of artificial flies and bait, but only at long intervals could one be caught. They preferred the black flies, gnats and mosquitoes, which were abundant, to anything that was offered them.

There were some 30 families camped about the lake, and although they were not living on trout, they procured supplies from the farmers at reasonable rates and were enjoying the mountain air. That there is quite a settlement about the lake is shown by the fact that 70 votes were cast in that precinct at last election. NO COW BELLS ON BIKES.

Boys Must Not Rob the Family Bivouac of Its Adornment.

Boys who have been in the habit of stealing the bell from the family cow, and then tying the bell on their bicycles, are getting into trouble with the police. Six lads, Fred Peterson, August Wickman, D. O'Connell, Harry Knox, Harry Berkman and Roy Lancaster, were before Municipal Judge Cameron yesterday charged with riding bicycles without bell attachments.

Several of the boys pleaded that they had cowbells attached to their wheels. The Judge asked Wickman why he carried a cowbell, and the boy answered that he carried it because it made the most noise.

"That's just the objection to a cowbell, it makes too much noise," said the Judge. "Citizens have complained to the police that certain bells wheemle use are too noisy, and cowbells must be stopped."

"What sort of bells are we to use, then?" asked the boy.

"We can't allow a bell to be carried that rings all the time. Get a bell that can be rung when necessary," advised the Judge.

The boys were released on promising to buy approved bicycle bells, and their wheels, which had been seized in the meantime, were afterward released when the bells were shown at the police station. The police state that cowbells are not bicycle bells, in the meaning of the ordinance, and that they will seize all cowbells they find attached to wheels.

TROUT BY THE THOUSANDS

But Not One of Them Would Rise to Fly or Take Bait.

Misfortune still continues to pursue trout fishermen. Few find any place where the trout are plentiful, and when they do find them they cannot be caught. S. Benson and Thomas G. Farrell returned yesterday from an excursion to Trout Lake, near the foot of Mount Adams. They had a most enjoyable trip and were charmed with the view of Mount Adams from the lake, and the ice caves they visited.

They left Portland Sunday on the Bailey Gatzert and landed at White Salmon and proceeded thence to Trout Lake on their bicycles, a distance of 27 miles. The first mile and a half of the distance was up a steep grade. The road the remainder of the way is fairly level and very good, and the scenery fine. The road follows the general course of White Salmon River, part of the way through a settled agricultural country, but for some 12 miles the land is poor and there are no settlers. "DOING UP" CIGAR DEALERS

Two Sure Thing Men Beating the Nickel-in-the-Slot Machines.

A pair of sure thing men, a tall one and a short one, both about as bad as they make them, are in the city and have been "doing up" several cigar dealers by working a charm on their nickel-in-the-slot machines. These fellows put in an appearance at F. M. Cohn's cigar store a day or two since. One proceeded to play the machine while the other stood around the corner at the other end of the counter. The fellow at the machine expended several nickels and won two or three cigars. Then the other fellow expressed a desire to throw the dice for a cigar. He was very clumsy and dropped the dice on the floor and kept Mr. Cohn's attention fixed on him. He finally won a cigar or two, when the other fellow called out that he had a "straight."

Mr. Cohn had not heard the machine being operated and asked him how he had got the straight. He said he had put a nickel in the machine and turned up the straight. Mr. Cohn suspected something wrong, but was proceeding to hand over five cigars, when the other man who had been throwing dice remarked that it was a "royal flush" the machine showed. This proved to be a fact, and the player asked how many cigars were paid on a royal flush. "I pay 100 cigars on a royal flush," said Mr. Cohn, "but you do not get them." He tumbled to the situation and saw that he was being played for a sucker. "Then I will have your machine taken out," said the sure thing man. "All right," said Mr. Cohn, handing the early days, before ice or liquid air machines were invented, are about six miles from the lake. Benson and Farrell visited them and, descending a ladder some 20 feet, found themselves in a cave about 100 feet long, from the roof of which hung huge icicles.

On their way from White Salmon to the lake they took a meal at the wayside hostelry of a pious Mormon, whose prayers were longer than his bill of fare or his hair, but not nearly so satisfying to his guests. On their return they took breakfast with him again and pitched in at such a lively rate and made such a clatter with coffee pot, cream jug, plates, knives and forks, that the disciple of Brigham Young could not get a chance to put in a word edge-wise, and so he saved a long prayer for his next visitors.

On their way back they caught a few trout in White Salmon River, but in their dreams they still see the lake and the thousands of leaping trout they did not catch.
