THE WORLD WILL BE FULL

In the Year 2250, According to J. Holt Schooling.

Chicago Tribune.

Without asking counsel of Malthusianism, but merely by applying the 19th century average of increase to the future, Mr. J. Holt Schooling announces in the July Cosmopolitan that "the world will be full" in the year 2250, at which time it will be inhabited by 52,000 millions of persons, averaging 1000 to the square mile. This good-humored prediction, however, based on the assumption that the rate of 1 per cent per year of increase in the population of the earth, which obtained during the last century, will continue indefinitely, is only incidental to several important and presumably reliable deductions concerning the movement of the earth's population during the last century.

In the first place, it appears that, while this population—according to the most reliable calculations—increased from 682 millions in 1810 to 1600 millions in 1900, the rate of increase was something like a third more rapid in the early than in the late portion of the century—which fact would of course impeach the propriety of applying the average rate of the entire century to the future.

In the second place, the most striking of all the results shown is "the great supremacy that has been won during the 19th century by the Teutonic race over the Latin race." This is shown in the following table, in which "Teutons" comprise the population of the United States, the United Kingdom and Germany, while the "Latins" comprise the people of France, Italy and Spain:

	1800. Millions.	1830. Millions.	1860. Millions.	1890. Millions.
Teutons	43½	67½	98½	149
Latins	55	64⅛	77	86

From these figures, omitting certain minor corrections, which might reasonably be demanded, it appears that the Teutons have increased at a rate out of all proportion to that of the Latins. The author accordingly remarks that, as "the past has been with the Latin race, the future is for the Teuton stock." In this generalization, however, he omits reference to Russia, with her increase from 35,000,000 to 92,000,000 between 1800 and 1890.

None of the tables is more interesting than the following, which gives the relative density of population in the principal countries of the world.

Number of persons to the square mile:

Russia	15	Germany	263
United States	21	Italy	289
China	95	United Kingdom	339
Spain	96	Holland	411
France	186	Belgium	572

The disparity thus shown in different countries sufficiently discredits the idea that social ills at the present time are chargeable to the overpopulation of the earth.

Russia Innocent for Once.

Outlook.

How suspicious all are of Russia! Some years ago, one bright June morning, three warships were sighted off the east coast of Corea. I watched them make the entrance into the outer harbor, all apparently with full steam ahead. Suddenly one stopped and let the others pass. In a set position she hung, steaming madly all day long, with no noticeable change. She did not even turn with the tide; there she stood planted, as though not in water, but on land. The other vessels wheeled about, lowered their boats, and there was great commotion. We learned at night that the Vitchius had a rock four feet through the bottom. The crew was landed on an island near by, and the Far East said, "Ah, ha! a trick of Russia to secure a footing in Corea"; English came by and said, "By jove! these rascals are up to something"; Japan hove-to to "looksee." All Summer long the Russian fleet struggled with the ill-fated ship, and just when hope of success began to dawn a wild Autumn storm struck her and the ship "herself went down by the island crags to be lost evermore in the main." The Russians moved away, and the Far East still sometimes asks, "What do you suppose they were after?"

The Arabs and the Telephone.

Independent.

We had a party of Arabs along with us, and took them all over a great newspaper office. Everything was wildly astonishing to them. They had imagined that the Koran contained all the wisdom and knowledge of the world, yet here was the telegraph, the telephone, the electrotype, the printing press. The place was a veritable enchanter's castle to them. They would never have believed in the telephone if I had not called up their hotel and got one of their own party at that end of the wire. The dervish who had come along was bold as well as pious. When he heard that his friend, five miles away, was talking through the instrument, he made a dash at it. He was greatly excited, and yelled in a megaphone voice. He thought we were tricking him, but here was his friend talking Arabic. He rolled his eyes at me in a despairing manner, and then began a search for devils, being quite convinced that the 'phone was an invention of Satan.
