CITY NEWS IN BRIEF

WAS GREEN GOODS, BUT NOT A GOLD Was Green Goods, But Not a Gold Brick - A "green goods" man in the East recently sent a package of seductive liter-ature to a resident of Portland. On re-ceiving a request for a sample of his wares, he inclosed a S-note. The prospec-tive victim, on receiving the 35 note, im-mediately turned it over, with all the letters and circulars of the green goods man, to a United States official, in the hope that a clew might be found which would lead to the arrest of the villain. The Gov-ernment official proceeded to test the quality of the note by asking a banker to give him change for it, which the banker proceeded to do. The official then in-formed the banker that the note was a forged and fraudulent one, but on careful examination it proved to be a genuine greenback, as good as wheat, and worth its face in gold. This being the case, there was nothing further to be done in the matter, and the official pocketed the change as his fee, and the green goods man was out and injured $5. The moral in this case, to which the attention of the intended victim is called, is: "Always look a gift horse in the mouth."

HOLDING GOSPEL MEETINGS .- Mrs. Anna J. She formerly conducted a prosperous business in Chicago, and, in 1871, her fortune was swept away. In the agony of despair she cried, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me." agony of despair she cried, sy my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" She read from the lith chap-go hunting for them. of Isalah, wherein the prophecy of young Summer ducks and maliards was mixed with it. It had such a pleas-hatched among the sloughs and bottom ant smell and taste—something like lands along the Columbia are getting so well grown and the date on which the open season for shooting ducks has been sot so late-September 1-that sportsmen are fearing that the Summer or wood ducks may all leave for the South before the shooting begins. It is the custom of the Summer duck to leave for the South as soon as the first rains set in. In order to make things pleasant for them, and induce them to stay here till they can be lawfully shot, sportsmen are beginning to feed them. One who has preserves on Columbia bottom has sent out five tons of wheat, and another, who has large sporting grounds leased on Sauvie's Island has sent down 19 toos of wheat. If the rains come early and the ducks leave for the South they will be in prime condition for the California sportsmen, but that will be no consolation to the sportsmen here, who would prefer to kill and eat the young, fat, tender and julcy ducks themselves, Tourists Eulogize the Columbia .- It

SHOOTING GROUSE OUT OF SEASON, Persons going to the mountains for a holiday are beginning to take their dogs and guns along, and it is reported that quite a number of young grouse have been shot. It should be borne in mind that the en season for grouse is from October 1 December 1. The open season for pheasants begins and closes on the same dates. It is said that young grouse and early coveys of pheasants are ripe and ready for shooting, and probably many of these precoclous birds will never live to see the beginning of the open season.

CANOR TRIP ON THE DESCRITES .- Several Portlanders are making a cance trip on the upper waters of the Deschutes er. In the party are Bert Mackay, derick Macleay, P. B. Gifford and Dr. George F. Wilson. The start into the mountains was made from Eugene on the wagon road southeast to Crescent Lake. In the small lakes in that region the Portlanders expect to get some good fishing, after which they will go by cance down the Deschutes to below Bend and cross over to Belknap Springs, coming out by way of Eugene.

BEAR KILLING MADE EASY Mixture of Molasses and Whisky Helps the Ax and the Gun.

Life in a logging camp is rather strenuous, especially in the great fir forests along the Columbia River, where many of the trees were a hundred years old when Columbus discovered America, and where, occasionally, such trees are found growing over the trunk of a prehistoric cedar of the same or greater age. loggers, however, have lots of fun oc-casionally, and such fun as dwellers in cities would give all their old clothes to have a share in. Nels Thorshammer, a big, double-fisted Norwegian, who used to hunt bears in his own country, but who and, in has for some time been working in a In the logging camp on the Clatskanie, was in logging camp on the Clatskanie, was in the city yesterday and was telling of the sport the men in the camp had with a family of bears last week. Summer Ducks Well Grown.—The ant smell and taste—something like "peach and honey"—that Nels had hard work to keep the boys from drinking it, but he finally got it s-rely planted about the center of the skid road, where the bears were numerous. Early next morning a party started out to see if the bears had tackled the bait. They found two old bears and two half-grown ones reeling about the pan, which was empty and licked as "clean as a whistie." The youngsters were almost insensible, but could just roll around and try to play with each other, while the old ones sat on their haunches, gazing stupidly at the gambols of the cubs. The men watched them for some time, till they could stifle their laughter no longer, and then rushed out on them. The cubs were dispatched with a club, and never knew what hurt them. The old ones tried to climb a tree, and the way in which they stag-gered around and fell over backward when they struck up against the tree would have made a horse laugh. The bears were not so accustomed to the use of whisky as some loggers are, and what they and taken had gone to their heads and rendered them helpless. Nels brained the old female with his ax and the male was shot by one of the boys. The skins, after being soaked in the river to wash away the molasses, were hung up to dry, and any bears that hereafter meddle with the skid roads in that camp are bound to find their skins "hung" on bush.

They cause much loss to dairymen by annoying cows, so that they cannot eat half as much as they should, consequently there is a falling of the flow of milk, and less butter cheese. Some dairymen have tried to overcome this by blanketing their cows with burlaps, others by keeping their cows in a dark barn during the heat of the day and feeding them only at night and in the morning and evening.

Dealers in dairymen's supplies now keep on hand fly-bounce and other liquid prep-arations for the protection of milch cows and driving horses. These are not grate ful to the olfactory nerves of the fli and when the cows or horses have be brushed over with the preparations the flies fly away. The stuff has to be re-newed every two or three days, and as newed every two or three days, and as it costs about il 25 per gallon, the ex-pense of keeping a herd of cows painted with it is considerable. The stuff can be most expeditiously applied with a sprayer. Every family should have a battery of sprayers for spraying cows, fruit trees, hopvines and about every-thing else that grows on or out of the thing else that grows on or out of the earth, and the farmers should begin their daily devotions with "Let us spray."

He was educated at Hartville University, and was admitted to the Northwest Conference in 1859. After filling many of the prominent churches and acting as presiding elder for several years, he was elected bishop May 23, 1888. After prayer by Bishop Joyce, Bishop Cranston said: "This great company is significant of a greater fact. The human heart remains true to itself. When a man, so well known for integrity, largeness of spirit, and un-bounded zeal, passes into the great be-yond, the many who have been benefited by such a life assemble to express their sympathy. This is no chance gathering. We are all partners in this sorrow and "I feel moved by the power of such a life. There was never a truer or braver heart than that which has ceased to beat, Knowing a long time of impending death, Dr. Gue never for a moment faltered in his work. He went steadily onward, cheerful, full of wal and unflagging interest. His courage was sublime and his powers as a leader wonderful. It was this remarkable spirit of enthusiasm and

The shadows have fallen. Under them the range of vision is not wide nor the sight very plain. We wipe the tears away and look again. The world is not rich in such men as he was. Could I have had my wish I should have said, 'Live, live, live.' But the one mind, the mind omnipotent, that planned and built the universe, sees and can answer the guesintverse, sees and can answer the question 'Why has our brother died?' It was never intended that the little space lying on this side of the cradic, should be the last of the masterfulness of a great life. This life is the drill ground, the place character is built and mind unfolded. All this means a journey in the end and when the gates are pushed open there will come the reward for all this labor and toil.
"Early in life, Dr. Gue awoke to the fact that life was a mission. Life is not a time to play, to lolter and spend idly. Our departed friend thought it all too short for such levity as this, and lived that thought through to the end. In this man's record, the cheer with which he did his work showed him to be thoroughly in love with it. With him the Bible was a message of good news. I have never heard him express a word of doubt, fear

OREGON SURE OF PRIZES

JUDGES SURPRISED AT THE EX-CELLENCE OF THE EXHIBIT.

Commissioners Find It Difficult to Convince Visitors That the Big Cherries Are Not Plums.

The preliminary work for awards at the Buffalo Exposition began last Tuesday, and exhibitors are awaiting the announcements. Oregon stands a good show to receive a liberal share of the prizes. The judges express great surprise at the excellent showing made by this state in all departments. Superintendent Dosch has worked early and late for several weeks getting every exhibit properly labeled. This meant the placing of several thousand labels in the Agricultural, Horticultural, Mining, Forestry and Educational buildings. Writing from Buffalo, Mrs. Edyth Tozler Weatherred, one of the Oregon Commissioners, says; "Our cherries are being admired, and it is difficult to convince some that they are cherries and not plums. The fact that this fruit was shipped 3500 miles and had been 13 days off the trees created nad been is days on the trees created much interest, especially when they were still in good condition.

"The Dolly Varden and Rainbow trout continue to be coveted by sportsmen. Fish Commissioner Van Dusen and the Rod and Gun Club have added a pleasing exhibit to the Oregon display.

"Many people are in position to assist the state by forwarding products that compilment the state, even though the producer or manufacturer has no need of advertising his goods for personal or com-mercial advantage. Too often those able to add to a general exhibit of the state's resources stop and consider individual interests. In sending fruits, the packers should exercise great care and judgment use an abundance of tissue paper and be ware of bruised fruits. Cherries and oth er perishable fruits should be packed only two layers deep, with oil paper between the layers. Otherwise they will heat and "A few days ago the Oregon people were entertained at our department in the Hor-ticultural building by Professor Van De-man, superintendent of the fruit and floral exhibits. We had most delicious pineap ples from Florida, an extra fine variety occanuts from Jamaica, grape juice from New York, and apples from Illinois. The Oregon people have received many courtesies from other states. Many states have an allowance to be used as an en-tertainment fund, the practical citizens realizing that friendly social relations go a long way toward leaving favorable impressions of a state long after the size of potatoes, trees and other products has been forgotten.

"Quite a number of visitors from Ore-gon have registered at headquarters this week, each one being well pleased with the showing of our exhibits. No person can give our display a moment's consideration without feeling proud of his own state as compared with that of others. This time Oregon could have made a much grander display on a larger appropriation, yet the one collected and in-stalled is deserving of much credit. "The Pan-American Exposition in a thunder storm is not a lovable sight. The Oregonians who witnessed such a storm a few nights ago hardly appreciated it until all danger had passed. Streaks of light-ning came straight down like heated from being passed from the heavens, and the thunder was so loud that one could not hear another speaking three feet away. At the Temple of Music a very crowded house was listening to an organ recital when the storm began. At the first loud when the storm began. At the first loud burst of thunder the electric lights went out, and with the forces of nature light-ing the building, with tremendous roar, there was a shriek and in a moment it seemed that the mass of people were on the verge of a panic. The organist start-ed to play "Nearer My God to Thee," the choir began singing, here and there over the house the audience picked up a line, and in a few moments several hundred and in a few moments several hundred voices could be heard above the roar of the storm."

A Boy's Important Part in the Strike, Reading, Pa .- A 16-year-old Polish boy, Peter Zawidski by name, is a most im-portant factor in the ironworkers' strike now in progress. He is the interpreter for the foreign-tongued strikers of the speeches and orders of the American organizers and leaders, and by his skillful performance of this difficult duty has done more than any other one person to make the strike a success. In former strikes the failure of the foreign workmen to understand the plans and orders of the leaders has been a fatal source of weakness. At the great mass meetings, where the officers instruct and encourage the union officers instruct and encourage the men, Zawidski sits on the platform and listens intently to the speeches. When the speaker finishes the lad arises and repeats the address in the Polish language, almost word for word. Zawidski is aml tious to obtain a college education, and the strikers assert that when they return to work they will raise a fund to pay for

HAIR NATURALLY ABUNDANT.

When It Is Free of Dandruff, It Grows Luxuriantly.

Hair preparations and dandruff cures, as a 'ule, are 'licky or irritating affairs that do no earthly good. Hair, when not disessed grows naturally luxuriantly. Dandruff is the cause of nine-tenths of all hair trouble, and dandruff is caused by The only way to cure dandruff a germ. a germ. Ine only way to the unitarity is to kill the germ; and, so far, the only hair preparation that will positively destroy that germ is Newbro's Herpicide—absolutely harmiess, free from grease, sediment, dye matter or dangerous drugs. It allays itching instantly; makes hair glossy and soft as silk. "Destroy the glossy and soft as slik. "Destroy the cause you remove the effect"-dandruft.
