beauty and inspiration of nature all around him, then he will remain upon the farm.

What do the professions offer to a young man? Let me quote from an ad-dress delivered by President Harper to a graduating class of the Chicago Univers-ity: 'You, who are now entering the world, will find that poverty will be the strongest opponent to overcome. You, who are entering life as lawyers, need only to look at the papers today to find that the average lawyer does not earn his sait. Those who will become physi-cians will find that their only companion for a few years to come will be the wolf at the door; while those who go forth to teach need only to witness the struggles of the school teachers in this city. The School Board is beset with howis and walls for an increase of salaries.'

"This certainly offers but little encouragement to the ambitious young man to turn his back upon the farm to engage in these conflicts so vividly portrayed by President Harper. Does the student in agriculture fear the wolf entering the door? Is he afraid there will be a jack of opportunity for the application of his skill to the practice of the farm? No, for he knows full well that there is an endicas field with a fruitful harvest in the broad domain of agriculture for intelligent domain of agriculture for intelligent final accounts, showing receipts to be thought and well-directed energy. If the $12,374 03, the disbursments to be $8466 39, sturdy young men of the farm will avail themselves of the opportunity to acquire scientific information, as a reinforce to their practical experience on the farm, they need have no fear that painstaking industry will not bring its abundant re ward. There is no vocation in life which offers surer returns from intelligent effort than farming. No position in life carries with it greater dignity or presents a larger field for the application of science than does that of the farmer. We grossly underestimate the necessity and value an agricultural education for the mer boy. Agriculture is the science of farmer boy. sciences, and the profession of professions, since it requires scientific skill and trained art to attain the highest achievements

"Progressive agriculture means mu nore than the simple mechanical operation of the plow and caring for the farm stock in a desultory fashion. Scientific at-tainment in chemistry, biology, soil physics, and other science related to agricul-ture is indispensable to success. The farm home is not revered as it should be, either by the young or old. This in a great measure is due to the want of atractiveness in its appointments. Too many of the farm homes are for sale, thus traging a nomadic spirit. The farm regarded as a sacred heritage, where the occupants plant for succeeding generations. Until we appreciate the true worth of the farm home no well directed effort for permanently increasing its beauty and attractiveness can be expac "Progressive agriculture mes is bette tilled farms and a more perfect utiliza tion of the crude products in the manu facture of high-priced food. The up-to date farmer will market the products of his skill in the most concentrated form, thus economizing in transportation and retaining the waste products to increase the fertility of his land. But farming, in the absence of educated tillers of the soll, will fail to reach the dignified posttion to which it is entitled. The farm boy must be taught to see and appreciate the beauties of nature. A closed siliance between labor and learning, be-tween science and the manual arts, must be cultivated. His education should strengthen his ambitions for the farm, rather than divorce them from it. His taste and appreciation for rural life must be stimulated through congenial environ.
