SCENE EXTREMELY AFFECTING

Body of the President Was Taken to the Buffalo City Hall, Where It Lay in State During the Afternoon and Night.

BUFFALO, Sept. 15.-Buffalo today beame a city of mourning. The decorations of the Pan-American Exposition gave way to the symbol of sorrow. The fled the tolling belis of the churches. Bits of crepe appeared on every sleeve. The sorrow was everywhere apparent.

In the morning a simple service took place at the residence on Delaware avenue where the President died. Only the immediate family and the friends and political associates of the President were present. The scene there was pathetic in the extreme. Then the body was borne through solid walls of living humanity, bare-headed and grief-stricken, to the City Hall, where it lay in state.

There the remarkable demonstration ocurred which proved how close the President was to the hearts of the people. Ar. rangements had been made to allow the public to view the body from the time it arrived, at about 1:30 o'clock, until about 5 o'clock. But the people were wedged into the streets for blocks. When 5 o'clock came 40,000 people had passed, and the browd waiting below in the streets seemed undiminished. It was decided to extend the time until midnight. Then for hours longer the streets were dense with people, and a constant stream flowed past the bler. When the doors were closed at midnight it was estimated that 80,000 people had viewed the remains. Thousands of isappointed ones were still in the streets. The body will lie in the City Hall until norning. It will be taken to the station by a military escort tomorrow morning, and at 8:30 the funeral train will start

A Somber Day.

The day was gray and cheerless, Heavy clouds hung over the city, at times breaking to let through a rift of sunshine, and then threatening to let loose a down. pour upon the gathering multitude. The air was humid and heavy, and only a light wind from the south stirred the drooping flags and the emblems of mourning. The very elements seemed to lend fit. of death was woe unspeakable. ting accompaniment to the scene of sorrow about to be enacted.

Long before the time set for the funeral services the vicinity of the Milburn house was astir with preparations. At 9 o'clock long platoons of police officers, mounted bier. His head was to the rising sun. On each direction the streets were roped off of his face bore mute testimony to the pamoned to the service, the uniformed escort of marchers and those whose business imperatively brought them there, passed within the four-square precinct about the house where the body of the dead chief

Assembling of the Military. The time was now approaching for the service. The tramp of the assembling military could be heard, and the walk leading up to the Milburn house began to be lined with those who were to be assembled about the bier. Even amid the stir of assembling a solemn and awelike silence prevailed, and the division of the escort came to their posts with silent

At 10:30 o'clock the military and naval detachments took temporary station on West Ferry street, immediately around the corner from the Milburn house. First came Companies I and L of the Fourteenth United States Infantry, stationed at Fort Porter, under command of Captain John R. M. Taylor, marching with the steady tread and bearing of regulars. Following them came a company of the Seventy-third Coast Artillery, now on duty at the Pan-American Exposition, in command of Captain John P. Weisser. These were the men who had been near the and who took part in the struggle with his assassin. The National Guard of the State of New York was represented by picked companies from the Seventyfourth and Sixty-fifth Regiments, under command of Captain Howland.

Then the trappings of the military arm United States Navy, as 50 men from the United States gunboat Michigan, under into position alongside their military brethren in arms. The naval contingent tachment of marines in their dark-blue uniforms and with large gilt-trimmed helmets. After them came the bluejackets. Sallors and marines marched with their tire military and naval force formed in company front on East Ferry street, and there waited for the services to begin.

Arrival of the President,

It was just eight minutes before the opening of the service when a covered barouche drove up to the house bringing President Roosevelt and Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox, at whose house he is a guest, The President looked very grave as he alighted and turned to assist Mrs. Wilcox from the carriage. His face did not relax into a smile to the salutations of those nearest the carriage, but he acknowledged the greetings silently with an inclination of the head. He passed up the well-filled walk, and those waiting to gain entrance fell back, making a narrow lane through which Mr. Roosevelt passed along to the house.

As the President passed within the house and the services were about to begin, the long line of soldiers and sailors swung in columns of fours into Delaware avenue and formed in battalion front along the heautiful thoroughfare opposite the house and immediately facing it. On the extreme left were the regulars on the right the sallors and marines, and in the center the National Guardsmen, They stood at parade rest, with colors lowered, each flag wound about its staff and bound with crape. The front of the house and the lawns had been cleared by this time and the sweep of the avenue was now deserted, save for the rigid, motion less ranks across from the house. The service had already begun when down the avenue four high-stepping black horses came into sight, drawing the hearse which was to bear the casket of the dead President. It was a heavy vehicle, without plumes or any trappings to relieve the send wack. The hurses, too, were not plumed or caparisoned, and all four of them were black from nose to tip of tail. Two men were on the box, the driver, with long lines to the tandem pairs, and the groom with folded arms, sitting motionless. Outside the house all was silence and waiting. Within the house

The body lay in a black casket on a black bear-skin rug. Over the lower limbs was flung the starry banner he had loved so well. The flowers were few, as befitted the simple nature of the man, A spray of white chrysanthemums, a flaming bunch of blood-red American Beauty roses, and a magnificent bunch of violets were on the casket. Behind the head, against a pier mirror between the two curtained windows, rested two superb wreaths of white asters and roses. These were the only flowers in the room.

The sentries, one from the sea and one from the land, guarded the remains. They stood in the window embrasures behind the head of the casket. The one to the north was a Sergeant of infantry. In the other window was the sailor, garbed in the loose blue blouse of the Navy.

He Was Taken With Pneumonia the Third Day Out-Voyage Was Without Incident Except for a Few Minor Accidents.

More in sorrow than in rejoicing the Naval Battalion of the Oregon National Guard returned last night from a nine days' cruise on the cruiser Philadelphia. With them they brought the body of one ' the voyage, rowing: abandon-ship drill, fire drill, col-lision drill, heaving lead, and steering, each man taking his turn at the wheel. The target practice with the heavier guns was not held until the vessel was about 125 miles out at sea. Then a naval target was placed, and the vessel steamed around it at a rate of about six knots an hour, while the practice was on. The shots were fired at distances varying from 1100 to 2000 yards. Port Angeles was the only point touched, aside from Astoria, where the battallon embarked and where it disembarked. The voyage to Port Angeles and the 125-mil run to sea were the only trips made. The vessel was outside the mouth of the Columbia River Thursday afternoon, but owing to rough seas did not enter until yesterday afternoon, when the entrance was made with ease. The news of President McKinley's death was sent to the Philadelphia Saturday afternoon by a tug which was passing out. The fact that a member of the battallo The fact that a member of the battalion happened to be seasick did not excuse him from military duty by any means. So long as he was able to do anything he was kept at work. Only the certificate of the doctor that he was too ill to work would excuse him. The members of the battalion say that fully 50 per cent of their number were troubled more or less with seasickness at various times during the voyage.

JAMES B. PARKER

THE NEGRO WHO STRUCK DOWN CZOLGOSZ AFTER HE FIRED THE SECOND SHOT.

James B. Parker, of 450 Sixth avenue, New York City, is the negro who stood directly ahead of Czolgosz when he shot President McKinley and who hurled him to the ground with a terrific blow after the second shot was fired. Parker was born in Atlanta 45 years ago, in slavery. He left New York last Spring to wait in an exposition cafe. He is a giant in size, standing over 6 feet, and as erect as an Indian. The assassin tore his vest buttons entirely off in the struggle. Parker was at one time a waiter in the Kimball House, Atlanta, of their comrades-one who had gone out | Several accidents occurred during the as full of joyous anticipation as any of them, but who did not live to return. The one day, the forward six-inch gun was young man was Henry L. Early, a mem-ber of the Third Division of the battalion. He was taken with pneumonia the third day out, September 8, and Saturday afterside the mouth of the Columbia for calm off the after bridge one night in heavy weather so that it could cross in, he died. Yesterday afternoon, when the vessel fastened in the davits near the bridge, landed at Astoria, Early's body was taken ashore with full naval honors. The regu-skinning it severely. He was not otherlar crew of the vessel lined up on the starboard side, and the battalion on the port side. Borne by several of his comrades, Early's body was taken to the side of the vessel, and lowered into a boat, while the marines stood at "present arms," and the others with uncovered heads. Across the coffin, which was made on shipboard, was spread the Stars and Stripes. Comspirits of the other young men. To two of the members of the battallon the occa- across the room without a second's warn-sion lent a touch of sadness. These were ing, demolishing dishes and everything in breaking the news to his waiting parents. The father and mother were at the train to meet their boy and were almost prostrated by the news of his death. The father is the representative of a sewingmachine house, and Early himself was a painter by trade. Two of his sisters are dead, and he was the sole remaining child. He was 20 years of age. Early residence is at Ockley Green. The family has lived here but a few weeks.

Incidents of the Cruise.

Aside from the death of young Early the voyage was enjoyable, and resulted in much good to the battalion. All the boys agreed to this, although they had to work hard from the time they left Astoria until they returned. It was not a pleasure cruise, and the youth who went away with the impression that it was going to be a picnic was undeceived be-fore he had been long at sea. The Philadelphia left Astoria on September 6. She proceeded almost immediately to port Angeles, where she was for three days. The stay at Port Angeles would have been shorter had not a heavy fog come up, which made leaving impractiable. The members of the battalion had to get up at 5 o'clock every morning. Their first duty was to scrub the deck, after which a coat of sand was sprinkled over their hard work usually well prepared them. After breakfast they swept the decks of the coat of sand. Breakfast and the sweep-down over, the regular work of the day began. This varied. Some days they would go through one drill, and some another. They were drilled in every duty that falls to the lot of ordinary sailor of the navy, and Lieu-tenant-Commander W. S. Hughes, of the

A Quartermaster belonging to the soon, while the cruiser was waiting out-regular crew of the vessel was knocked wise injured.

One night while the ash pits were being manned, a member of the battalion, whose name could not be ascertained last night, was hit with a trolley and knocked senseless. He was brought around all right, though he felt somewhat dazed for In the messroom the members of the body was in the baggage-car, and this fact had the effect of putting a damper on the a heavy rolling sea, the mess table and benches of the crew were pitched clear Ensign Ned Smith and Quartermaster Eugene Leer. Thursday night, while the Philadelphia was outside the mouth of the Columbia, the steam steering gear, to which the rudder is attached, broke, and thereafter the hand steering gear had to be used. The same night the main steam pipe broke, and from that time on the auxilliary steam pipe had to be used. This did not furnish the desired amount of steam, but the crew had to be satisfied with it.

The battation consisted of two divisions the First and the Third. Both were under command of Lieutenant W. T. Bird, of Portland. The Second Division, of As-toria, disbanded some time ago. Last night, when the battallon left the train, it marched to the Armory under command of Lieutenant Bird, and disbanded. Every member of the battalion denies the story sent out from Astoria to the effect that the town was "painted red" by the boys the day they arrived there preparatory to going out on the cruice. This story was published not only in the As-toria papers and telegraphed to the Portland papers, but to the San Francisco Ex-aminer and Chronicle as well. The mem-bers of the battalion say there was not a shadew of foundation for it, and that was manufactured out of whole cloth Everyone who was on the cruise says that Drs.
