Another of the numerous Rickmers fam-By of ships arrived in yesterday afternoon, after a moderate passage of 42 days from Hingo. This latest arrival is the Renes Rickmers, which made her first trip to Portland about a dozen years ago. At that time the Renee Rickmers was the largest German ship that had ever entered the Columbia, but the same capmas, and the American bark Harry Morse, with a cargo of salmon from the Alaska tain flust brought her in then has since come to Portland twice, with the Peter Fishermen's Packing Company's Bristol Bay cannery, are reported outside, The German bark Renee Rickmers ar Rickmers, which carries 1500 tons more cargo than can be stowed away on the Renee Rickmers. UNLUCKY CROMARTYSHIRE.

Fainous Old Clipper on Fire and Ahandoned Off South Africa.

A hoodoo seems to be hanging over the famous old clipper Cromartyshire, which has made so many lightning passages between Portland and other Pacific Coast ports and Europe. For years she salled the zeas without the slightest accident. but since her unfortunate collision with La Bourgogne, her luck has changed. no way to blame for the collision which sent 600 people to the bottom of the Atlantic, the Cromartyshire was pretty badly damaged at the time, and has been in trouble nearly all of the time since. After being repaired at Halifax she made one trip to the Orient, and then came to Portland last year. Here she pecured the highest charter that has been written in this port for over 10 years. She was loaded with barley by Kerr, Gifford & Co., and a few days after sailing enntered a storm which battered her up so severely that she was obliged to pu into San Francisco for repairs. She lost over a month by this accident, but met with no further mishap on the way home After discharging her cargo from Port-land she loaded at Leith for Algoa Bay, sailing in June. She made a fast outward passage, but on August 13, when off Mossel Bay, caught fire and was so badly burned that the crew abandoned her. She was subsequently picked up and towed into Port Elizabeth, where a survey

J. W. CLEAVER, WHO DIED YESTERDAY.

J. W. Cleaver died at his residence on Mount Tabor yesterday morning, at the age of 76. His demise is notable from the fact that he was the ploncer fur niture manufacturer and undertaker of the Pacific Northwest. He was of English birth, and went to Canada in his early youth, and to California in 1849. In 1850 he came to Oregon, and started a chair factory in Portland, and to this day many of his chairs are yet in evidence, so thorough was his workmanship. He combined with his furniture business the undertaking of funerals, and made the irst interment in Lone Fir cometery. Later he transferred his business to Baker City, where he remained for many years, but returned to Portland about one year ago, leading a quiet and retired life. He was married to the second daughter of the late J. W. Peters, and left his widow and three adult children

More than once the Russian Em-peror galloped ahead among the soldiers and watched their proceedings as though desirous of satisfying himself of their efficiency and value as fighting units. The skirmishing army corps early developed an attack upon Fort Fresne, the minor fort. The Czar and Czarina, with M. Loubet and others, mounted the earthworks inside and watched the whole army corps advancing to the assault. The enemy approached in heavy lines under the shalls of th artillery, to

The British steamer Glenlogan, now loading on Puget Sound, is in command of Captain James McGregor, who brought the steamship Genlochy to Portland four years ago. Since giving up command of the Gienlochy Captain McGregor has superintended the building of a number of new steamers for the Glen line, the latest addition being the Glenroy. The steamer which he now commands was formerly the Denton Grange, which went ashore in South Africa while in the transport service about two years ago. She was bought from the underwriters by her present owners, who expended nearly $150,000 in making her as good as a new ship. The President and his imperial guests reached Rheims by carriage at 5 o'clock, Here the party visited the beautiful Gothic cathedral. After admiring the sculptured facade, which resembles a beautiful piece of lace work, the Czar entered the edifice. He was met at the porch by Cardinal Langenieux, Archi-bishon of Bheims in sculpt robes who John Guttemith, a neighbor of Bellmar's, testified that he went to the ranch to gather fruit, as Belimar had often told him that he could help himself to the fruit whenever he wished. Witness left his children to pick, the fruit and walked toward the house to pay Beilmar bishop of Rheims, in scarlet robes, who was attended by the Vicar General, at-tired in velvet and surrounded by the ciergy. The Cardinal conducted the Ema neighborly visit. On knocking at the door and receiving no answer, witness entered and found Bellmar in bed, with the peror around the cathedral, exhibiting and explaining the precious relics, in-cluding gorgeously embroidered garments worn by Cardinals in the middle ages. The programme was to have been con-cluded by silent devotions by the eccels-nation and their mainstics, but the Gran clothesline dangling from the bed post.
