A HOME FOR TWO—OR MORE.

The question of the expense involved in maintaining in comfort and respectability a home for two is one that admits of a divergent conclusion.

admitted that to Fitch, not Fulton, belongs the honor of the invention of the steamboat. Fitch, however, went to Europe, had run a little steamer on the Delaware, and exhibited his invention to Napoleon at Paris, and Thomas Carlyle claimed the honor of the invention.

THE END OF THE ROAD.

Mr. Murphy's portrait of Wade, printed yesterday, discovers not a bad face, nor yet a weak one. For all that is disclosed in the young man's looks, speech and bearing, he might just as readily have been a useful factor in business and an ornament to society as to be on trial for his life.

NOT A GREAT INVENTOR.

Referring to the monument to Robert Fulton, which was unveiled in New York City on the 8th inst., William L. Stone, who is excellent historical authority, writes the New York Sun that according to the testimony of Chancellor Livingston, who was Fulton's father-in-law, Fulton was a man of no great ability.

DEBUT OF PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—Miss Cordelia Roosevelt, daughter of Chevalier Roosevelt, and her mother, Mrs. Roosevelt, were voyagers on the recently arrived North German Lloyd steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse.
